Army War College
BY MAJ. GEN. J. M. SWING, USA
Commandant

THE Army War College is the senior institution in the Army Educational System, and its mission is to prepare carefully selected senior officers for the highest positions of command and staff responsibility in the Army. It is a post-graduate school, contemplative in nature and mature in aspect.

Maj. Gen. Swing

The history of the College closely parallels the development of the modern United States Army and through the pages of its history appear frequently the great military names of our country. It was during the Spanish American War that realization of our deficiencies in Army organization began to grow, and in 1899, President McKinley's Secretary of War, Elihu Root, a great and keen student of the military art, stressed in his annual report the need for improving Army organization. Among other measures, he recommended the establishment of an Army War College, and he emphasized that its members must be the ablest and most competent officers, of high rank, in the Army. As conceived by Mr. Root, the College was not to confine its interests solely to educational pursuits. He visualized that it would not only provide an opportunity for officers to conduct research and study in the higher fields of the military arts and sciences, but that it would also provide an agency to study and solve, for the Army, problems of current concern—in other words, it would perform duties which were essentially those of a General Staff. Actually, it was Secretary Root's way of creating an agency to perform the planning and administrative requirements of the War Department until Congress enacted legislation creating a General Staff—a military component which was already recognized as essential for foreign powers in the administration of large armies.

A College which, for the most part, was in consonance with the concept of Secretary Root was established in 1902, but in 1903 a General Staff was established and the mission of the War College as an educational institution was more clearly defined. General Tasker H. Bliss, one of the great soldier-statesmen of the Nation, was appointed President.

Early in his tenure, General Bliss established the concept of the College in a succession of simple but eloquent state-

Seeks Higher Pay For Jr. Officers

An effort will be made to obtain higher pay for junior officers of the Armed Forces in the omnibus bill of amendments to the Career Compensation Act which Representative Paul Kilday (D-Tex.) is preparing for introduction early in the 82d Congress, which convenes in January.

Representative Pat Sutton (D-Tenn.) has declared that he will strive to raise the pay rates now being received by lieutenants and captains of the Army, Air Force, and Marine Corps, and officers of equivalent rank in the Navy and Coast Guard.

The Tennessee Congressman told THE JOURNAL that he is not satisfied with the "relatively small" pay raises given to junior officers in the enactment of the Career Compensation Act and said he will seek remedial action early next year. Representative Sutton added that he feels there should be an amendment of the present restriction on longevity increases for junior officers who have had long enlisted service.

In this regard, it is to be noted that in Korea scores of enlisted men with long years of service are receiving commissions as second lieutenants in recognition of outstanding battlefield service.

The Career Compensation Act stipulates that no longevity pay increase is provided for a second lieutenant after a total of 14 years' cumulative service. A second lieutenant with 14 years' service receives $313.50 per month and so does a second lieutenant with over 30 years' service.

Similarly, a first lieutenant with over 14 years' service receives the same pay as one who has had more than 30 years' cumulative service—$349.13, and for captains the pay limitation goes into effect after more than 22 years' service, so that no captain may receive more than $441.75.

In view of the rise in living costs and the increase in income tax rates since pas-

IN releasing the names of 1778 officers named for temporary promotions on 5 Dec. to the ranks of temporary lieutenant colonel, major and captain, Army officers said this week that another list of temporary promotions to the ranks of lieutenant colonel, major and captain for Regulars and non-Regulars on the Army Promotion List is expected before the end of the year.

Presumably, after this list and an additional list of officers named for promotion to the temporary rank of colonel are released, the Army will resurvey the situation for all ranks, determine the number of billets still unfilled as a result of the accelerated expansion program and plan for additional temporary promotions next year.

Meantime, this week's lists of promotions advance a total of 1077 Army Promotion List majors—586 Regulars and 491 non-Regulars to the rank of lieutenant colonel. This marks the third increment of Army Promotion List temporary advancements to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

On 9 Sept., THE JOURNAL published the names of 648 Army Promotion List majors—344 of whom were Regulars—advanced to the rank of temporary lieutenant colonel. The issue of 11 Nov. carried the names of an additional 969 officers—517 Regulars and 452 non-Regulars—promoted to lieutenant colonel.

This means that a total of 2694 Army Promotion List majors have been promoted to lieutenant colonel in recent months, of whom 1447 are Regulars and 1247 are non-Regulars.

AF Promotions to Major

The list of Regular Air Force captains selected for permanent promotion to major is expected to be released shortly—possibly next week. Processing has been completed at Headquarters and the list awaits only the approval of the President.

Armed Forces Will Reach 2.7 Million

Against the background of a day-by-day worsening international situation, highlighted by stunning military reverses in Korea, Congress this week moved towards enactment of the President's request for an additional $16,844,247,000 in military spending, to provide an Armed Force of 2,711,121 by 30 June 1951.

There was no doubt that the money would be voted quickly and every indication pointed to even further increases in military funds and personnel to meet critical requirements.

The President's request for $16.8 billion more for the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps—additional funds for the Coast Guard were asked separately—sent the total military budget for the current fiscal year from $24.9 billion previously authorized to a new total of $41.8 billion.

Personnel-wise, from a 30 June 1950 strength of 1,460,000, in one year's time the Armed Forces will be expanded to a total of 2,711,121.

In fiscal year 1952, which will begin on 1 July 1951, an even further manpower increase is foreseen, since, for example, the Air Force alone is slated to move ahead from an immediate goal of 68 groups to an 84-group strength by 30 June 1952.

Whereas military budgets in the past few years have provided relatively small amounts for procurement, with the exception of aircraft, the President's new budget requests underscore the repeated pleas of defense officials for more new equipment.

Notably, the Army, which has been able to buy almost no significant new equipment, such as tanks and trucks, since the end of World War II, was given a large share of the $9 billion worth of procurement in the President's $16.8 billion budget.

Thus, the Army will receive an additional $1.3 billion for combat vehicles; $2.1 billion for ammunition and $2.6 billion for such other items as combat engineer and signal equipment, military trucks and stock renovation.

In a message to Congress accompanying his request for arms funds, President Truman declared that "the gravity of the world situation requires that these funds be made available with the utmost speed."

The President emphasized that the new appropriation request "is not a war budget. That would obviously require far more money."

He said, however, that the funds "will put us in a position to move speedily into an increased state of mobilization if the situation grows worse."

Indeed, the situation did grow worse during the week as the Chinese Communists threw hundreds of thousands of troops against the U. N. forces in Korea.

The President warned the Nation that "we must be prepared to endure a long period of tension."

For the individual Services, the $16.8

San Francisco Chronicle—"The Marines' mode of battle has never been pleasant to watch—the disciplined, efficient business of mass death-dealing never is. But part of the reason for the survival over these 175 years of America with its freedoms is this efficiency, and we have always been able to forgive the Corps the grim pride it took in its work."

Los Angeles Times—"The Marine Corps gets some tough, apparently hopeless assignments, and it takes the kind of fanatic loyalty to the Corps which professional Marines cultivate and which the occasional jibes of their fellow countrymen only strengthen, to go into such spots and come out grinning or not at all."

Galveston Tribune—"Without detracting anything whatsoever from the credit due to the Air Force for a superb job, it must be pointed out that the Marines, the Navy and the Army became the star performers in that big show (Korea)."

Salem, Oreg., Capital Journal—"The fine record of the Marines should not be unceremoniously pushed aside because Washington has put almost a ban on recognition of the historical past of the various branches of the defense forces."

Newark News—"In Europe in the first World War, in the Pacific in the second, the Marine Corps was given lethal assignments, which it fulfilled at grave cost to its members, but with a sense of tradition that brooked no hesitation. Its record is glorious."

THE WAR IN KOREA

THE retreat of United Nations forces in Western Korea in the face of overwhelming hordes of Chinese Reds ended late this week with the establishment of a tentative defense line about 25 miles south of Pyongyang, the former North Korean capital. Enemy pressure lessened somewhat toward the end of the week, except in the northeastern sector where fierce fighting was in progress.

The Eighth Army in the western sector succeeded in disengaging itself from the enemy and executed an extremely skillful withdrawal to positions between Seoul and Pyongyang. Elements of the X Corps in the northeast fought terrific battles with several Red divisions in fighting their way through a series of enemy traps.

In the northwestern battle area the Eighth Army broke contact with the Chinese Reds and withdrew in good order, bringing out most of its equipment and keeping its units intact, though some of them sustained heavy casualties. Such supplies and equipment as could not be withdrawn were destroyed, together with all installations having possible military value to the enemy.

The former North Korean capital city of Pyongyang was left in flames, the United Nations rear guard leaving the city after destroying all remaining military stores, power plants and industrial facilities of potential military use. Bridges across the Taedong River at Pyongyang were blown as our troops withdrew to join other elements of the United Nations forces that filled the roads moving south toward Seoul.

A few hours after the last Allied troops left Pyongyang the Red Chinese entered the city, fording the icy Taedong River, while Allied planes inflicted heavy casualties on the advancing Reds. Thousands of panic-stricken residents of Pyongyang, a city of 300,000, fled southward seeking an uncertain refuge from the new conquerors of Korea.

The bulk of the Eighth Army is still well north of the 38th parallel, where an attempt is being made to establish a relatively secure line that will insure the continued possession of Seoul, the Kimp'o airfield, and the highly important port of Inchon, through which our troops are receiving much of their supplies. Thirteen Asiatic and Near Eastern countries have appealed to Red China to halt its troops at the 38th parallel, the old boundary between North and South Korea.

The ability of the United Nations forces to hold a line north of Seoul in the face of attacks by overwhelming numbers of Chinese Reds is conjectural. An advantage which may be expected to accrue from the long retreat is the increased vulnerability of the lengthened supply lines of the Communists. It will not now be possible for the Reds to get troops and supplies to the front line from Manchuria in a single night. Allied planes will be able to interdict much of the movement by daylight.

However, if the ban on bombing troop concentrations, military installations and transportation facilities in Manchuria remains in force it will be most difficult for Allied forces to conduct an effective campaign, or to provide an adequate defense for the greatly outnumbered ground troops.

The situation in Northeastern Korea, where the 1st United States Marine Division and some units of the 7th American Army Division are surrounded by Red forces, continues serious. The American troops fought their way down either side of the long Changjin reservoir and joined forces at Hagaru, at the southern tip. From this point nearly 3,000 wounded Marines and soldiers were flown to safety by transport planes using an improvised airstrip.

From Hagaru our troops drove through heavy enemy opposition to Koto-ri, eight miles to the southeast where they joined other beleaguered American units.

Our forces in this area are completely surrounded by seven to ten Red Chinese divisions, and are being supplied by air drop. Efforts to push rescue units of the American Army 3d Division through from the southeast have been unsuccessful, as they have been stopped by heavy concentrations of enemy troops.

Nevertheless the morale of the surrounded Marines and soldiers remains excellent. They have inflicted tremendous casualties on the enemy and are confident of fighting to safety. They are being given round-the-clock tactical air support by Navy, Marine and Air Force planes. For the first time in Korea Marine flyers are using proximity fuses in anti-personnel bombs directed against the enemy in the Changjin reservoir area.

Units of the 7th U. S. Army Division, which had reached the Manchurian border on the Yalu River at Hyesanjin, have been withdrawn and are now moving toward the east coast, presumably for evacuation by sea. Similarly the South Korean Capital Division, which had advanced far up the east coast toward the Siberian border, is also being withdrawn. It is protected by the eight-inch guns of the U. S. Heavy Cruiser St. Paul and by naval aircraft. It has encountered relatively light enemy opposition.

Also in the northeastern sector are the American Army 3d Division and the 3d South Korean Division which have been guarding land approaches to the ports of Wonsan and Hungnam.

United Nations forces in Wonsan were evacuated by sea to another location in Korea. The movement was covered by naval fire. The port of Hungnam farther north is still in United Nations possession and may be utilized in evacuating the more northerly units of the X Corps.

In briefing members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the current military situation this week General Omar N. Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, indicated that withdrawals in Northeast Korea would put our troops in that sector in a position from which they could be evacuated by sea, if necessary. The statements of the general were made in a closed session of the committee, but some of those present let it be known that they had gained the impression that the situation in Korea was not as bleak as had been feared.

General J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, arrived in Korea this week for a personal inspection of the front and to learn from first-hand observation what the Department of the Army may do to improve the situation. At a press conference in Korea General Collins said that there was only one army division, the 82d Airborne, remaining in the United States, which was ready for combat. Other divisions, he said, were in training. In response to a question the Chief of Staff indicated that from what he had seen in Korea there was no present tactical use for the atom bomb in the current conflict. He did not comment on any possible advantage of its use against bases in Manchuria or elsewhere in China.

The headquarters of General Douglas MacArthur, commander-in-chief of United Nations forces, this week estimated that the Chinese Reds now have a million men, one-fourth of their total army, already committed or readily available for the Korean war.

The total number of Chinese Reds in the forward echelon is fixed at 268,000, of which 144,000 are in the 4th Field Army on the western side of the Korean peninsula, and 74,000 are on the eastern front. Immediately in the rear is the support echelon, comprising a minimum of 550,000 troops, some in Korea and the remainder just behind the Yalu River in Manchuria.

Included in the support echelon are 400,000 troops of the 4th Field Army and the North China Special Army Group, probably 75,000 from the 3d Field Army, and possibly 75,000 from the 1st Field Army, reported in the Tumen area, or en route thereto. Other units of the 1st and 3d Field Armies, probably totaling 200,000 additional Chinese Red troops, are en route to the combat area.

General MacArthur's headquarters comments that the presence of large Communist Chinese forces in Manchuria and North Korea was not the result of a sudden impulse, but must have been preceded by a long period of planning, followed by a considerable time necessary for troop movements, some of which originated in Central China. The conclusion is drawn that preparations to invade Korea were made long ago, and possibly the decision to commit the Chinese troops in the conflict came after the military forces of North Korea had been decisively defeated.

Tremendous casualties have been inflicted on the Chinese Reds, both by ground fighting and by air attacks, but with their overwhelming numbers the losses have not appreciably lessened the force of the Communist onslaught, nor diminished the military capabilities of the Reds. In four days this week it is estimated that our planes have killed more than 8,000 Chinese Reds, but heavy reinforcements are still moving from Manchuria to the front.

United Nations casualties have also been heavy, though numerically much smaller than the Reds. More than 14,000 United Nations soldiers suffering from wounds and frost bite were evacuated in eight days from forward airfields in the northwestern sector, and more than 3,000 from an emergency airfield near the Changjin reservoir in northeast Korea.

While the North Korean army was practically annihilated on the northward march of the United Nations forces, some remnants of that army are now being re-organized behind the Red lines in North Korea and Manchuria, and several thousand North Korean soldiers are conducting guerrilla warfare behind our lines. This irregular fighting by pockets of guerrillas has erupted to a marked degree since the major victory of the Red Chinese in the north.

Chinese Reds continue to stream across the border to reinforce units fighting both in the east and the west. While most of the Reds are moving on foot considerable vehicular traffic has been noted, and some tanks and horse cavalry units have appeared at the front. A small camel train was also observed bringing supplies over mountain trails.

At Changjin, directly north of the reservoir where heavy fighting is in progress, a convoy of vehicles 30 miles long was observed moving south at 3 A.M., 4 Dec. Farther north a large body of troops, accompanied by trucks towing artillery, was seen by air observers. These movements came under heavy Allied air attack and many casualties resulted. It is estimated that at least three new Red divisions moved into Northeast Korea during the week.

In the west there was heavy enemy vehicular traffic in the Huichon area, indicating large movements of supplies and reinforcements from Manchuria to the western front. Under Allied air attack some of the trucks exploded, probably because they were loaded with ammunition. There was also a heavy increase of rail movements of supplies and troops from Manchuria.

Increased enemy air activity was noted during the week. In an encounter near the Yalu River four enemy jet planes attacked one American armed jet and one unarmed reconnaissance plane. One enemy aircraft was damaged by the American armed jet, after which our planes took evasive action and escaped undamaged from the pursuing enemy planes in the vicinity of Pyongyang.

Several enemy Yak fighters on an airfield at Sinuiju on the Korean side of the northwestern boundary were destroyed or damaged by our planes. Later photographic reconnaissance indicated that the field had been abandoned after the raid.

Navy Personnel Bill

Navy appropriations requests, now before the Bureau of the Budget, also contain some personnel changes, THE JOURNAL learned this week.

Reportedly included in the recommended legislation is a change which would permit the Navy to retain all officers who have been passed over by selection boards, but who are qualified to continue in their present assignments. Such legislation has been rumored at various times for all of the services. It was not confirmed by the Navy.

Army-Navy Game

After seven years, Navy has come out the victor in the annual football contest between West Point and Annapolis.

Saturday's 14-2 win over the mighty Army eleven was labeled as "the year's biggest upset" by sportswriters throughout the country, and it was still being celebrated at Annapolis as late as Monday this week when Academy Superintendent Vice Adm. Harry W. Hill called off all afternoon classes for the brigade.

Earlier, on its return from Philadelphia, the Navy team was greeted by wildly cheering townspeople, the midshipmen, and even neighboring St. John's College. The new, big bell from the carrier Enterprise—installed last year for the prime purpose of tolling victories over West Point—pealed loudly day and night, as did the old Perry bell.

The loss shattered Army's winning streak of 28 games.

Star of the service classic was Bob "Zug" Zastrow, Navy quarterback, who sneaked 7 yards through the Army line for the first touchdown, and passed 30 yards to end Jim Baldinger for the second Navy score. It was also Zastrow who was pinned in his own end zone for Army's 2 points.

Family Care Bill To Have Priority

Legislation which will spell out specific Congressional authority for protection of traditional dependent care benefits to personnel of the Armed Forces will be given "priority" treatment by the House Armed Services Committee early next month.

This statement was made to THE JOURNAL this week by Representative L. Mendel Rivers (D-SC). He explained that there will be no opportunity in the present abbreviated session of Congress to enact his dependent care measure.

"I expect to reintroduce the dependent care bill as one of the first pieces of legislation in the new Congress," the South Carolina legislator asserted, "and I have the assurance of Chairman Carl Vinson and other members of the Armed Services Committee that the bill will have a first order of priority."

Meantime, in an interview, Representative Rivers took cognizance of the important letter from Mr. Charles P. Cooper, chairman of the Armed Forces Medical Advisory Committee, published in the 25 Nov. issue of THE JOURNAL.

In that communication, a response to the editor's request for his views on dependent care in the light of Secretary of the Army Frank Pace's report that "uncertainty with respect to medical care for service dependents is having a distinctly detrimental effect on Army morale," Mr. Cooper related that his Committee has seen "no evidence of any reduction in dependent hospital care since the Committee was organized in January 1949."

Mr. Cooper revealed that his group was interested in studies relating to a possible insurance program "to supplement the existing dependent care program," and this week THE JOURNAL learned that such a study, involving the matter of group health insurance, is being made by the Personnel Policy Board.

Representative Rivers, chairman of the Armed Services subcommittee on hospitals and a staunch Congressional supporter for the dependent care program, had this to say regarding possible institution of a group health insurance plan for military personnel in place of present benefits:

"It is my belief that Congress will never permit anybody to get fat off the insurance fees of G.I.s and others entitled to family care."

Reasserting his intention to safeguard the dependent care program, Representative Rivers added: "It is my belief and that of many others in Congress that dependent care is part of a solemn contract entered into by representatives of the United States Government and men and women who enter the country's Service. This policy will not be changed, in my opinion, by the action of any bureaucratic board."

In sponsoring legislation which will give specific authority for dependent care, Representative Rivers is seeking to spell out in legal terms, which cannot be questioned, traditional Congressional approval for dependent care, given now in budget appropriations.

At the present time, only the Navy has a specific statute on the books regarding dependent care. The Army and Air Force have had to rely on the implicit Congressional approval, always given by the voting of funds for dependent care.

It is recalled that the Hoover Commission noted the Services' authority for such care was open to interpretation.

Representative Rivers has said it is his plain intention to remove any doubts that persons may want to have concerning the intent of Congress in the matter of dependent care through his bill.

When the new Congress meets in January, the dependent care bill will be introduced almost immediately, then will be referred to the Armed Services Committee, which in turn will send it to the subcommittee on hospitals, headed by Representative Rivers.

Thus, since the entire subcommittee has gone on record in forthright support of dependent care and since Chairman Vinson consistently has fought any attempt to curtail family care for military personnel, it is to be expected that the bill will be cleared by the Armed Services Committee in rapid fashion.

The Military Chaplaincy

"The country's citizens should be proud of their chaplaincy in the Armed Forces and extend to chaplains their fullest support." So concludes a report on the Military Chaplaincy made public this week by the President's Committee on Religion and Welfare in the Armed Forces.

"It would be unfair," the report states, "to conclude this report without a word about the generally satisfactory state of affairs in the military chaplaincy. Our Armed Forces are doing a highly commendable job meeting their responsibilities to military personnel and their families. The chaplains are a positive influence for good and they serve to promote the spiritual welfare of the Armed Forces in a manner calculated to promote the best interests of the Nation."

The report pinpoints "Selection and Training" as the two basic problems of the Chaplaincy. The report states:

"It is to the credit of the three Chiefs of Chaplains, and to the entire chaplaincy in all three services, that there is nothing fundamentally wrong with the chaplaincy, except for the acute shortage of those exceptionally well-qualified candidates for the chaplaincy who are so vitally needed. This state of affairs leads to the inevitable conclusion that the best way to improve the chaplaincy program is to improve the quality of the chaplains, which in turn reduces down to two problems:

"1. How to select and secure the best-qualified clergymen for duty in the chaplaincy; and

"2. Once having selected the best-qualified clergymen, how to train them for the most effective use of their abilities."

The report brings up the question of whether or not the church agencies which endorse candidates before they may be selected as chaplains also have the right to withdraw that endorsement after the officer has been commissioned. The Committee feels that they should have this right and recommends:

"To all the services: That at every turn they encourage the denominations to take an active interest in the chaplaincy; that they invite the denominations to take increased responsibility for recommending qualified candidates for the chaplaincy; that they ask the denominations to help appraise the work of chaplains in the field; that they recognize the right of denominations to withdraw endorsement and encourage denominations to review endorsements periodically and in so doing, evaluate the work of their chaplains; and that they take increased and vigorous steps to present the attractions of the chaplaincy to seminary students and civilian clergymen.

"To the denominations: That they accept increased responsibility for recruiting, endorsing, and evaluating chaplains; that they maintain close liaison with their chaplains in the field and try to promote their work; that they institute courses on the chaplaincy in their seminaries; and that they give chaplains important positions within the denomination in recognition of the key importance of the chaplain's mission."

The Committee also recommends that the three Chiefs of Chaplains seriously consider the establishment of a unified chaplain's school. The Army and Air Force now have such a school but the Navy does not.

The report pointed out that whereas in the Army and Air Force commanding officers are forbidden to assign collateral duties to chaplains, the Navy gives them many collateral duties such as having charge of the ship's paper, the library, orienting personnel before docking in a strange port, handling insurance, war bonds, legal aid, fund-raising and the like. The report points out that it is usually the chaplain who absorbs the brunt of social welfare problems in connection with Navy Relief. "In such cases," the report states, "when the work load is heavy, Navy Relief should employ a social welfare worker as executive secretary."

The report also appeared critical of the practice of employing an outside minister as chaplain for the Military Academy, pointing out that since 1896 they have all been Episcopalian. The report said:

"This practice at West Point seems to minimize the position of the military chaplain. Since all cadets are future commanding officers, a practice which seems to infer that military chaplains are inadequate for West Point as clergymen would seem to prejudice the attitude of these cadets toward future staff chaplains.

"The United States Naval Academy at Annapolis uses regular Navy chaplains as cadet chaplains, and believes this policy to be satisfactory. In the contemplated Air Force Academy, provisions for religious ministrations will be the responsibility of the Air Force chaplaincy."

The members of the President's Committee are: Frank L. Well, Chairman; Miss Dorothy C. Enderis; Truman K. Gibson, jr.; Francis Keppel; Lindsley F. Kimball; Mark A. McCloskey; Basil O'Connor; Dr. Daniel A. Poling; Mrs. Ferdinand Powell, sr.; Mrs. George Hamilton Shaw; and Rev. Edmund A. Walsh.

Gen. Cates Addresses AOA

Marine Commandant General Clifton B. Cates said this week that the United States must be equipped "to make our will felt wherever our interest is threatened."

Speaking at a meeting of the American Ordnance Association in New York City on 6 Dec., General Cates said he believed "our thinking in relation to our armed services has been clearer and more realistic since the outbreak of the Korean war." The present expansion program, although it "represents a very sizable outlay of money," he said, "is still a rather modest program when compared to our world-wide obligations."

Victory will come, he said, "only if the American people face their responsibility and hold steadfast to their purposes."

The policy of "calculated risk" set by the Defense Department prior to the Korean war, "left a great deal to be desired," General Cates said. "I would not attempt here to fix responsibility for these shortcomings because I believe that it properly belongs to all of us. We just were not facing the issues squarely. We had lulled ourselves into a false sense of security and Korea has shown that we were very near a grave world crisis."

He said the trend came "to a sharp halt when we entered the conflict and our thinking has been clearer since."

General Cates said that the experiences of the Marine Corps, following the beginning of the Korean war, closely parallel those of the other services, and he presented the following summary:

"On 25 June our Fleet Marine Forces—the combat elements of our Corps—consisted of two Marine Divisions and two Marine Aircraft Wings, all at a reduced strength. These were organized on a basis of what we called peace tables of organization, but their actual strength was far below even the meager figures of those tables. We only had 27,000 Marines in the entire Fleet Marine Force but had our units been at full war strength, the total would have been approximately 60,000. What we had were well trained, in a high state of readiness, and organized for rapid expansion in an emergency."

"General MacArthur's first request for Marines was for a regimental combat team with supporting air units. Upon the approval by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, we organized the 1st Provisional Marine Brigade composed of the 5th Marine Regimental Combat Team (at reduced strength) and the Marine Air Group 33. Orders were issued on 5 July and the Brigade sailed from the West Coast 9 days later. Before the end of July, our commitment had been raised to a full war strength division and a Marine Aircraft Wing. To meet this, we utilized every trained Marine available. Practically all the troops from our 2d Division in North Carolina were transferred to the 1st Division in California. One infantry battalion which was afloat with the 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean was even sent to Japan by way of Suez, the Indian Ocean, and the East China Sea."

"By using every available regular Marine, we still would not have had the 1st Division at required full strength had it not been for our trained reserves. It is impossible to overestimate the value of these reserves to our national defense. They have been one of the few bright spots since World War II. In 53 days we mobilized all of our organized ground reserves and a small part of our air reserves. We were forced, by press of circumstances, to send some of these men with the 1st Marine Division to Korea. We set up a screening process to select those best qualified and the men who went, in the responsible judgment of our field commanders, all had the required training for the jobs they were assigned. I can tell you that these officers and men, who were in civilian life a relatively short time ago, are performing magnificently in combat in Korea."

"As a result of these efforts, we had 31,000 Marines in Korea at the time of the amphibious assault at Inchon on 15 September. This is significant when compared to the 27,000 in the entire Fleet Marine Forces last June."

SQA Pay While Prisoner

As the result of a decision handed down by the United States Court of Claims this week, a former Army enlisted man will receive back pay for quarters and subsistence allowance during the period when he was a Japanese prisoner.

The services have previously credited prisoners of war and missing persons with foreign service and sea pay, submarine, aviation and parachute pay, longevity, medal pay, uniform allowances, rental, subsistence and quarters allowance, but have not credited such persons with any per diem allowances in lieu of subsistence and quarters.

The plaintiff, Carl W. Dilks, who was a sergeant in the headquarters squadron of the 18th Bomb Wing at the time of his capture, was receiving quarters and subsistence allowance when taken by the Japanese on Wake Island. The Court ruled that he is entitled to recover the allowances for subsistence and quarters as well as "increased allowances . . . provided for in subsequent Executive Orders" issued during his confinement.

The opinion of the Court was delivered by Judge Littleton who said, in part:

"Defendant points out that when Congress knows the administrative construction of a law and fails to amend the law, it may be held to have affirmed the administrative construction, citing Brooks v. Dewar, 313 U. S. 354. What precisely then, did Congress know of the administrative construction of Section 2 of the Missing Persons Act? From the legislative history set forth above, it is clear that Congress knew that 'temporary allowances such as per diem for travel expenses' were not considered by the agencies to be the sort of pay and allowances that should be credited to a captured soldier's account. Thus we may conclude that Congress may have intended specifically that per diem for travel expenses was an excluded allowance. What other temporary allowances had been administratively excluded, Congress was not told. However, the portion of the Committee report quoted above lists certain allowances that would be credited and yet to us appear to have a certain 'temporary' flavor, such as flight-pay, rental allowance for officers where no quarters are supplied, and quarters and subsistence allowances for enlisted personnel where no quarters or rations in kind are furnished. From the record it appears that an officer receives a subsistence allowance as part of his regular pay, but a bachelor officer is only entitled to a rental allowance if no quarters can be furnished him. It also appears that the quarters and subsistence allowances specified in Table I of Circular 50 are payable only to enlisted men who are permanently assigned to a station where quarters or rations in kind are not furnished. Both these allowances and the rental allowance for bachelor officers may be credited to a man's account if he was in receipt of them on the date of his capture by the enemy. Yet both of these allowances terminate whenever the accommodations of which they are in lieu can be furnished by the Government. Although Congress was informed by the agencies concerned that it was their administrative practice to credit to a missing person's account only the 'continuing pay and allowances' to which such person was entitled at the beginning of his absence, we feel that the actual administrative decisions under such practices as to what is a 'continuing pay and allowance' are too inconsistent with the normal and usual interpretation of the term 'continuing' for us to attribute to Congress a knowledge of the precise types of pay to be included or excluded in the absence of specific designation."

"We conclude that there should have been credited to plaintiff's pay accounts during the period of his captivity from 23 December 1941, to 15 August 1945, the pay and allowances to which he was entitled at the beginning of his captivity and to which he became entitled thereafter, pursuant to Section 2 of the Missing Persons Act. Plaintiff, is therefore, entitled to the allowances for subsistence and quarters provided for in the applicable regulations set forth in our finding 7, and also to the increased allowances for subsistence and quarters provided for in subsequent Executive Orders, issued during plaintiff's captivity, as set forth in our finding 8. Judgment therefore will be entered in his favor. The entry of judgment, however, is suspended pending the filing of a computation by the General Accounting Office of the exact amount to which plaintiff is entitled in accordance with this decision."

UNITED STATES ARMY

Soldiers' Home Report

Additional funds for construction and the establishment of a more flexible ration allowances were the principal recommendations made by the Inspector General of the Army as the result of his annual inspection of the U. S. Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C. His report was filed in Congress this week.

"The U. S. Soldiers' Home," the Inspector reported, "is being administered and operated in an efficient manner notwithstanding the handicap of inadequate facilities to care for all persons entitled to and applying for membership." Maj. Gen. Howard K. Loughry, USA-Ret., is President of the Board of Commissioners for the Home.

The report also contained a special commendation for Brig. Gen. Robert C. McDonald, USA-Ret., the Chief Surgeon at the Home, for his administration and operation of the hospital. "It was observed," the report stated, "that his patient, friendly and sympathetic attitude, and action toward the sick, feeble, and senile patients, whom he knew by name, produced remarkable cheerfulness, order, quiet contentment, and friendly reaction from the patients."

"The need for new construction," the report said, "is as great today if not greater than one year ago. More former members of the Army and Air Force become eligible for admission to the Home as time goes on. The Annual Report of the Governor of the U. S. Soldiers' Home indicated that there were approximately 400 applicants awaiting admission to the Home as of 30 June 1950. No plans were available for the accommodation of members of the Women's Army Corps when they become eligible and request admission, although they have contributed to the maintenance of the Home through payroll deductions. The need for additional modern hospital and barrack accommodations cannot be stressed too strongly, to provide space for present and future applicants, and to eliminate every possible fire hazard, particularly where personnel are concerned."

Guard Association Officers

Appointments to three offices of the National Guard Association of the United States is announced by Maj. Gen. Ellard A. Walsh, Association President.

Brig. Gen. William H. Abendroth, Washington, D. C., was reappointed Assistant Treasurer of the Association; Col. Oliver P. Bennett, Mapleton, Iowa, was renamed Judge Advocate, and Lt. Col. Ferdinand A. Evans, Cincinnati, Ohio, was designated Chaplain.

Army Nomination

The President sent to the Senate this week the nomination of Lt. Col. William R. Shuler, Corps of Engineers, to serve as a member of the California Debris Commission, vice Brig. Gen. Walter D. Luplow.

Chief of Staff History

The Army has announced that publication of a nine-volume history of the War Department in World War II will begin with release of the first volume, "Chief of Staff: Prewar Plans and Preparations," on 15 Dec.

This subseries is part of the 90-odd volume project being prepared by the Office of the Army Chief of Military History under the title of "The U. S. Army in World War II." Combat volumes already published in the series are Okinawa: The Last Battle; Guadalcanal: The First Offensive; and The Lorraine Campaign.

Author of the first of the nine volumes is Mr. Mark S. Watson, distinguished military reporter, whose dispatches to the Baltimore Sun won him the Pulitzer Prize for international correspondence in 1945.

In 1933 when Hitler was rising to power, the author states, the U. S. Army was at its lowest effectiveness since World War I, standing seventeenth among the world's armies.

"In the thirties," Mr. Watson adds, "when war clouds were mounting both in Europe and Asia, the Army had ample time to rebuild itself, but no money. When war broke out in Europe late in that decade, the Army was given more and more money, but time, far more precious than money, now was lacking."

When arming did get under way, the volume points out, the plan to raise and train units had to be altered radically because of the belated discovery that required weapons and other equipment could not be supplied by industry until many months after the date set for the recruitment of troops.

Regarding the attack on Pearl Harbor, Mr. Watson holds that estimating Japan's intentions rather than its capabilities was one of the probable causes for the failure of the United States to anticipate the attack on Pearl Harbor. No U. S. military authority, the author states, considered the "strategic triangle" of bases—Alaska, Hawaii and Panama—as even potentially impregnable. But because Hawaii had received a maximum of personnel and equipment in proportion to the total available supply, it was generally believed that its very strength would discourage assault by an enemy. Of the three bases in the "strategic triangle," Panama was considered the most likely target.

The attack on Pearl Harbor, the author concludes "effected as complete a surprise as the Japanese had hoped for."

Besides examining official documents on an immense scale, Mr. Watson also used living sources, interviewing most of the principals portrayed in this volume. Told objectively, the story recounts failures and successes with equal thoroughness, and leaves the formation of judgments to the reader.

Like preceding volumes in the Army history, Chief of Staff: Prewar Plans and Preparations ($3.75) will be sold to the public by the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., and will be available at most Federal Depository libraries throughout the nation.

Gen. Suavet Retires

Retirement of Brig. Gen. Henry E. Suavet after more than 38 years of National Guard service, has been announced by Maj. Gen. Karl F. Hausauer, head of New York State's Division of Military and Naval Affairs and Chief of Staff to Governor Thomas E. Dewey.

For 10 years General Suavet was Assistant Adjutant General of the State's armed forces and since 3 Nov. has been the acting The Adjutant General. With the reorganization of the Division of Military and Naval Affairs approximately a year ago, General Suavet was assigned the added responsibility of Comptroller of the Division. Governor Dewey appointed General Suavet to his present rank on 29 Nov.

General Suavet joined the New York National Guard 27 May 1912, as a private in Company E, 23d Infantry, in Brooklyn. Serving with the 106th and 105th Infantry Regiments of the 27th Division, A.E.F., in France, he participated in the Ypres-Lys Offensive and the Somme Offensive. After the armistice he was detailed as a member of the Commission for relief in Belgium and Northern France.

In 1940 General Suavet was appointed assistant adjutant general of the State and because of his key position in the New York State defense setup was deferred from induction into federal service in World War 2 on recommendation of the Governor.

Members of the State Headquarters Staff presented Gen. Suavet with the insignia of his new rank and a general's flag at a testimonial dinner given in his honor at the Downtown Athletic Club in New York City. General Hausauer made the presentation.

Three Marines Retire

Three marines retired from the Corps 30 Nov. in San Francisco, officially ending a total of more than ninety years' service. In a brief ceremony in his office, Brig. Gen. Fred S. Robillard, commanding general of the Marine Corps Depot of Supplies, presented retirement papers to Commissioned Warrant Officer George Davison, Master Sergeant Howard G. Kline, and Staff Sergeant Evan M. Fain. All have been stationed at the Depot of Supplies.

CWO Davison will go on the retired list in the grade of captain, having held that rank during World War II. He will live in Tucson, Arizona, with his wife, Ethelyn, and adopted daughter, Jacquelyn. His future plans are indefinite.

SSgt. Fain, who is unmarried, will spend some time with his mother in Weatherford, Texas.

MSGT. Kline will continue to work for the Marine Corps in San Francisco after his retirement, this time as a civilian. He lives at 736 Easton Avenue, San Bruno, with his wife, Jimmie Leota, and their two daughters, Patricia Lou and Kathleen Sue.

Navy Transfers Ships

Three destroyer escort vessels are being readied by the Navy at the Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, N. H., for transfer to the Italian Navy.

All of the ships, which were built during World War II, will be commissioned in the Italian Navy early in January, following their completed reactivation. They are the USS Gandy, which will become the Italian ship Altair; the USS Thornhill, to be named the Aldebaran; and the USS Wesson, whose name will be changed to Andromeda.

Transfer of the three ships is being accomplished under the Mutual Defense Assistance Program.

Navy Pathology Atlas

A new Navy publication, The Color Atlas of Pathology, has been published by J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. The book was completed after six years of work by the Naval Medical School at the National Naval Medical Center, Bethesda, Md., and is regarded by the Navy as "an important contribution to medicine."

Preparation of the book was under the direction of Rear Adm. Lamont Pugh, Deputy Surgeon General of the Navy. Comdr. Charles F. Gechlicker, wartime head of the pathology department of the school, evaluated, correlated and assimilated the material in conjunction with Comdr. W. W. Ayers, currently the school's chief pathologist.

Academy Memorial Services

On 7 Dec., this week, the Naval Academy held memorial services for four graduates who received the Congressional Medal of Honor during World War II.

Three of those honored were Rear Adm. Isaac C. Kidd, Capt. Mervyn S. Bennion and Capt. Franklin Van Valkenburgh, who earned their awards during the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor nine years ago. Capt. Cassin Young, the other officer honored, died at Guadalcanal less than a year after the Pearl Harbor attack.

Four bronze plaques bearing the citation and likeness of each of the men, were unveiled by Fleet Adm. William D. Leahy, USN (Ret.), wartime chief of staff to the President. After the ceremony, the plaques were mounted outside the Bancroft Hall rooms occupied by the officers when they were midshipmen.

New Navy Course Set Up

A Navy postgraduate course in Operations Analysis has been established and will be conducted at either a Naval postgraduate school or a selected civilian institution beginning next Fall.

Applications are desired for the course now, the Navy said this week. Those eligible are General Line and Aviation officers in the regular grades of junior captain, commander, lieutenant commander, and lieutenant with at least six active years in operational experience. Considerable experience in active fleet operations is the primary requisite. Background experience in solving experimental problems is preferable, the Navy said.

Also desired are applications from officers who have had anti-submarine warfare, air, submarine, amphibious or gunnery training. In addition, applicants must have successfully completed mathematics through differential and integral calculus with a "B" average or better, equivalent to a mark of 80 per cent.

The planned course will include one year of academic study in general engineering and in basic problems of operations research and their applications to Naval problems, followed by a one year tour of duty under instruction in operational development force with experienced operational research personnel assigned to that force.

Applications should be submitted through channels to reach BuPers not later than 2 Jan. 1951. The application should include a statement of agreement to serve a minimum of four years in the Naval service following completion of the course.

Supply Board Announced

Membership of a Navy selection board which met on 28 Nov. to name Supply Corps officers for promotion to the grade of Rear Admiral was announced yesterday.

Rear Adm. Archie A. Antrim is president of the board. Other members are: Rear Admirals William B. Fox, Frank C. Dunham, Samuel E. McCarty and George F. Yoran.

The board is expected to complete its work this week-end, and the selections will be announced in next week's JOURNAL.

Sixty-four eligible candidates are being considered by the board. Those eligible are Supply Corps captains whose General Line running mates have served three years in the grade of captain as of 30 June 1951.

Unrestricted General Line captains who were in the zone this year, were graduates of the U. S. Naval Academy Class of 1922.

Navy Flight Nurse Uniform

Special summer and winter uniforms for Navy nurses assigned to duty involving flying, formerly issued only as flight equipment, have now become a regular uniform requirement.

The winter uniform is of green elastique. Worn with a tan cotton shirt, it includes garrison and baseball-type caps, shirt, slacks and battle jacket. Accessories are the present regulation beige hose, black shoes, gloves and handbag.

The summer uniform is basically the same design except that the material is tan cotton gabardine instead of elastique.

The battle jacket design has been modified to include straps on the shoulders. The wearing of shoulder straps will be optional until 1 July 1952, and mandatory after that date. Rank insignia are to be worn on the shoulder straps as of 1 July 1952.

Navy Calls More Reserves

The Navy announced this week that it plans to recall 15,000 trained Naval Reserve enlisted personnel during April, May and June.

About half of those recalled will be non-rated men of pay grades E-3 (seaman) and E-2 (seaman apprentice) with at least six months' prior service as seamen, hospitalmen and stewardsmen. The remainder will be reservists who hold rates in 34 specialties.

The only women to be recalled are Waves in communications technicians ratings.

Delay in Reporting

At the same time, the Navy outlined policy and procedure for Reserves requesting delays in reporting for active duty, as follows:

Naval reservists ordered to active duty will not be granted delay in reporting except in personal hardship cases or where such delay is regarded as in the national interest.

Each request for delay will be decided on an individual basis. No "blanket" delays for groups of reservists will be granted.

Consideration for delay on the basis of national interest may be granted in the following categories:

A—Individuals employed or engaged in critical occupations and essential activities identified as such by the Departments of Labor or Commerce.

B—Individuals occupying key managerial jobs in industry or key positions in governmental agencies.

C—Individuals enrolled in educational institutions or engaged in technical research and scientific activities.

D—Individuals requesting delays for compassionate reasons.

E—Certain officials of government as specified in Section 6 (f) of the Selective Service Act of 1948, as amended.

Requests for delay submitted by the reservist in anticipation of orders to active duty will not be considered, except in cases where the reservist has been notified officially of impending orders.

At present, requests for delay in reporting to active duty should be submitted in letter form within 48 hours after receipt of orders to active duty or official notification of impending orders. Request for delay can be originated by the individual or his employer and must be documented to establish justification for delay.

All requests for delay must be submitted to the command, either local or district, originating the order to active duty. If the Bureau of Naval Personnel originated the order, request for delay must be addressed to the Bureau.

If there is negative action on a request for delay in reporting the reservist may appeal. However, the appeal must be submitted promptly after notification that the requested delay will not be granted.

Aviation Cadet Ruling

In blanket decision B-93693, the Comptroller General has ruled that Naval Aviation Cadets on active duty are entitled to receive the same subsistence as is authorized for officers of the Navy on a monthly basis, "but only when not subsisted at Government expense."

The official digest of the decision follows:

"While section 4 of the Naval Aviation Cadet Act of 1942 as amended by section 527 of the Career Compensation Act of 1949 provides that aviation cadets on active duty shall be entitled to receive the same allowance for subsistence as is authorized for officers of the Navy, said cadets are not entitled to such allowance at all times on a monthly basis as is provided for naval officers by section 301 of the 1949 act, but only on that basis when not subsisted at Government expense.

"Where the operating expenses, including food items, of a Government officer candidate mess, established administratively much in the same manner as a general mess and requiring participation therein on a more or less mandatory basis, are paid from appropriated funds, such mess is not to be reimbursed for food furnished aviation cadets subsisted thereon."

Budget Increases

billion budget will be divided as follows:

Army

The Army which had a strength of 593,000 on 30 June 1950 will be expanded at an accelerated pace so that by 30 June 1951 it will have 1,264,900 officers and men.

Where its fiscal year 1951 needs had been set previously at $7,307,759,810, the new emergency resulted in a $9,210,865,000 increase in the Army budget, so that for the current fiscal year it will spend a total of $16,518,624,810.

The President's new budget allocates $4,003,500,000 for Army ordnance, mostly for vehicles and ammunition, and for modernization of equipment and build-up of mobilization reserves in other technical services.

For the purchase of 100,000,000 pounds of wool and woolen products, the President asked $350,000,000.

Further, the Army budget includes $75,000,000 for production facilities as needed to meet new requirements and for increased mobilization capacity. For additional support of the civilian relief program in Korea, another $100,000,000 is provided.

Navy and Marine Corps

Navy strength of 382,000 on 30 June 1950 will reach 688,971 by 30 June, according to present planning, while the Marine Corps expansion will result in a force of 166,155 instead of the 74,000 on duty as of the end of the past fiscal year.

To effect this expansion, the Navy budget has been bolstered from $7,837,745,633 to $10,817,116,633, an increase of $2,979,371,000.

The Marine Corps is to be given two full-strength divisions at combat readiness and funds are provided for a marked increase in the active fleet and for an orderly modernization of the fleet. There will be a build-up in ammunition war reserves and advanced base components.

Although the Navy will receive no increased funds for aircraft, money is granted for expansion of the production base. Conceivably, this will mean an increase in procurement of Naval aircraft at a later time, possibly to be included in the fiscal year 1952 budget, which will be sent to Congress shortly after it meets in January for the full session.

The Navy will have funds available for speeding construction of ships now under way and for the conversion of an additional aircraft carrier. Also, money is given for production of 18 minesweepers. The sea action off Korea showed the need for increased concentration on minesweeper equipment and techniques.

The Navy also will complete three liners now under construction by the Maritime Administration as troop transports.

Air Force

An increase of $4,603,011,000 in Air Force spending for the current fiscal year over the $9,392,004,000 previously allocated will send the 1951 Air Force budget to a total of $13,995,015,000 and will result in a personnel increase from 411,000 on 30 June 1950 to 651,095 in one year's time.

The previously announced goal of 68 groups by 30 June 1951 remains unchanged, but significantly procurement and other support in sufficient funds is allocated so that the Air Force will be able to have 84 groups by 30 June 1952. In this regard, it must be emphasized that a considerable "lead time" is required for the manufacture of aircraft.

Although additional funds for construction are contained in the budget, officials point out that these are only about one-half the amount required to provide operating and housing facilities. The Air Force persistently has stated that the lack of housing is a critical morale factor and accounts for a large number of separations of highly skilled personnel at great cost in defense preparedness and economy.

The President's budget envisages expenditures for modernization of the proposed 84 groups and for segments of reserve units and will increase the base for a fast expansion of production. Funds also are contained for procurement of initial supplies of guided missiles.

Overall Procurement Summary

Included in the total budget request for $16,800,000,000 is about $9,000,000,000 for procurement and manufacture of aircraft, ships and combat equipment and supplies and for the modification and renovation of military stocks. The President called for a $2,300,000,000 increase in aircraft procurement over previous estimates, asked $700,000,000 more new ships and alterations to existing fleet units. He said $1,300,000,000 is needed for combat vehicles, $2,100,000,000 for combat vehicles and $2,600,000,000 for other items.

The research and development program is to be emphasized with allocation of new monies for this purpose, with the aim to obtain modernized weapons as quickly as possible. The mobilization reserves will be strengthened and new tools will be acquired as part of the build-up of the production base. The public works program also will be speeded, a necessity to provide facilities for the expanded military strength.

The new requests raise to $1,070,000,000 the money available for research and development in the current fiscal year. As stated, the emphasis will be on twin-targets: (1) to accelerate development of new and improved weapons and to speed their distribution to operating forces; and (2) to increase the number of new items that can be moved ahead from research stages to full development.

U. S. AIR FORCE

Promote AF Lt. Cols.

Following months of planning and coincident with announcement of an accelerated expansion program, the Air Force disclosed this week that a central selection board will meet at the Pentagon early next month to name officers for temporary promotion to the rank of colonel.

Procedure for selecting officers for promotion to the temporary grades of lieutenant colonel and major is expected to be initiated later in January.

The selections will have a double-purpose aim, first to promote officers to fill newly created billets and second to adjust the ranks of Reservists on active duty whose rank is lower than that held in their respective Reserve component.

Eligible for consideration for promotion to temporary colonel will be approximately 2,250 officers in the following categories:

a. All Air Reserve or Air National Guard officers currently serving on active duty in grade of lieutenant colonel, who hold valid commission as colonel in Air Reserve or Air National Guard.

b. All Regular and non-Regular officers currently serving on active duty in grade of lieutenant colonel, regardless of permanent grade, whose date of initial appointment in that grade is prior to 1 July 1945 and who served on active duty in grade of lieutenant colonel or higher at least 20 months prior to 30 June 1947.

c. All Regular and non-Regular officers serving as lieutenant colonel who previously held the temporary grade of colonel but were later reduced, without cause, due to grade readjustment programs. This does not include officers appointed temporary colonels as result of terminal leave promotions.

The "best qualified" method of selection will be utilized by the USAF Headquarters board.

Officers named will be placed on appropriate selected lists in order of current seniority for promotion as vacancies occur.

As a guide to the selection board, major Air Force commanders have been requested to name in order of desirability for promotion approximately 20 per cent of those reported as eligible for promotion. In addition, those officers eligible under the established criteria but not considered qualified for promotion will be named by the commands.

Round-the-Clock Tests

Pilots and crewmen of Muroc are resting after a month of round-the-clock tension in the hardest job in the Air Force—six months of wartype flying jammed into one month—the accelerated service testing of a new jet fighter.

One hundred crewmen, two dozen pilots and three F-94s, newest all-weather jet fighter currently in production, were engaged in the "wring out" at Edwards Air Force Base at Muroc, and the program proved a test for men as well as machines.

The three F-94s were flown continuously by shifts of pilots, with maintenance men also working in round-the-clock shifts. Some pilots flew as much as 15 hours a day during the early part of the program.

Significant to many of the pilots, as well as to engineers from Lockheed and the Allison division of General Motors, was the fact that all three airplanes completed their test program without the change of a single engine.

The test was the first of an afterburner-equipped airplane by the Air Materiel Command. The afterburner, consisting of a simple grid in the tail cone over which is sprayed fuel for greater increased power, was operated much of the time during the program. While performance records are restricted, it is known that an afterburner gives a fighter such as the Lockheed F-94 the ability to reach 40,000 feet or more in half the time normally required.

Muroc test pilots began the flight program, in which each plane flew an average of an hour and twenty minutes between refuelings, with every jet pilot at the big base called in to take his turn. Even the commanding general, Brig. Gen. Albert Boyd, who flies everything at Muroc, flew his share of the missions. His deputy, Lt. Col. Fred J. Ascani; Maj. Gust Askounis, chief of test operations, and Capt. "Chuck" Yeager, famous for first flying through the sonic wall, all took their turns at the controls.

Liberalize AF Pay Ruling

The Air Force has notified commanders in Alaska that the $2 per day station allowance, formerly paid only to persons eligible for government quarters but who were not furnished them, now is authorized for married personnel of the lower enlisted grades not eligible for public quarters but whose dependents are with them in Alaska.

The ruling is retroactive to 1 Aug. 1950.

Leaves ATC

Col. James H. Wallace, Deputy Chief of Staff, Operations for the Air Training Command Headquarters at Scott AFB, Ill., has received a new assignment to overseas duty with the Alaskan Command. Prior to reporting to San Francisco for embarkation, Colonel Wallace will visit Rochester, N. Y. and Washington, D. C.

In his new assignment, the Colonel will serve at Elmendorf AFB, Anchorage, Alaska. The Alaskan Command, which is one of the first joint commands established, is headed by Lt. Gen. William E. Kepner, and is staffed by officers and men of the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Air Nurses Graduated

Military medical responsibility contains the same general medical practices and doctor-patient relationship as civilian medicine but is more concerned with preventive medicine, Brig. Gen. Dan C. Ogle, Deputy Surgeon General, USAF, said 25 Nov. at Montgomery, Ala.

General Ogle spoke at graduation exercises at Gunter Air Force Base chapel for 50 student nurses who had completed the first six-week Flight Nurse course of Gunter's School of Aviation Medicine.

Conceding that "an injury or a disease process in a man wearing a uniform is no different from similar pathology encountered elsewhere," the general said that the "military doctor and nurse are vitally concerned, however, with how this injury or illness was incurred; how it might have been prevented; in what manner and how swiftly was the patient brought to medical attention; and whether or not medical care could have been more expeditiously brought to the patient."

Military medicine places great emphasis, General Ogle said, "on plans to prevent disease and injury and plans to carry medical service to the source of the disease and injury whenever incurred." In accomplishing this broad field of preventive medicine, the general said, "military medical men encounter specialized medical responsibilities peculiar to a world-wide deployment which may take the potential patient in a matter of hours from an area of medical and health security to the primitive adversities of the Arctic, the desert or the tropics."

"Military medicine encounters the necessity for training to support tactical requirements and concepts and weapons systems of ever-increasing complexity. This necessitates imaginative and protracted planning and thorough training to enable the service to give adequate medical support and individual personal care under the peculiar circumstances that obtain. It requires constant identification with the combat arm to be supported."

Visitors attending the exercises included: Maj. Gen. John DeF. Barker, Deputy Commanding General, Air University; Col. L. Render Braswell, Commandant, Maxwell Air Force Hospital; Lt. Col. Verena M. Zeller, Chief of Air Force Nurse Division, Hq., USAF; Capt. Winnie Gibson, Director of Navy Nurses Corps, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, Washington; Lt. Comdr. Mildred Terrell, Chief Nurse, U. S. Naval Hospital; and Lt. Christine Gerhardt, Physical Therapist, U. S. Naval Hospital, Pensacola, Fla.

General Ogle was introduced by Col. Robert L. Platt, commandant, Gunter branch, School of Aviation Medicine. Chaplain (Maj.) Harold D. Combs, Gunter Chaplain, gave the invocation and Chaplain (Maj.) Edward J. Fitzgerald, Maxwell Base chaplain, the benediction. Music was rendered by Miss Corinne Combs, organist at the Gunter Chapel.

Reactivate Air Base

Columbus AFB, a World War II flying training base at Columbus, Miss., will be rehabilitated and reopened as a basic flight school within a few weeks.

This will be the second base to be reactivated and to be operated by civilian contract since the war. Reactivation of Greenville AFB at Greenville was announced on 31 Oct. Both bases will accommodate approximately 450 students.

Signal Corps Board

Colonels Edward A. Allen and Thomas J. Maddocks, SC, USA, have been designated as permanent members of the Signal Corps Board. Col. James D. O'Connell and Lt. Col. William J. Given have been relieved as members of the Board.

New Air Base

An advance force of 274 officers and men has arrived at the former Sampson Naval Training base near Geneva, N. Y., which will become an Air Force indoctrination center to supplement Lackland AFB, Tex.

Col. Frederick W. Ott has been named base commander for the facility, slated to open on 1 April.

It is expected that about $3,000,000 will be spent to refurbish the huge base, built at a cost of $88,000,000.

To make room for Air Force activities, 109,000 bushels of surplus grains, acquired by the Department of Agriculture and stored at the base, will be moved.

When put into operation, the new air base is expected to have a permanent party of about 5,000 to train approximately 16,000 airmen.

March AFB Housing

Plans for the construction of a housing project to accommodate 644 families of military personnel of March AFB, Calif., to be built in the Camp Haan area, are announced by Col. Wiley D. Ganey, Base Commander.

Approximately 70% of the units or 451 quarters will be assigned to enlisted airmen and their families.

SATURDAY, 9 DECEMBER 1950

"If we, as a Nation, are to assume leadership of the free world, we must, in my judgment, have Armed Forces in being which permit us to make our will felt wherever our interest is threatened."—GENERAL C. B. CATES, COMMANDANT, U.S. MARINE CORPS.

The Lesson of History. The Army's newest volume in its historical series, "Chief of Staff: Prewar Plans and Preparations" by the able Mr. Mark S. Watson, sets forth in interesting detail the sad story of the unpreparedness of our Army at the outset of World War II. Our organized forces were small. We faced the problem of training men and of converting industry to supply the needs of war. The same problem faced the other components of the Defense Team. Although better told and in more detail, Mr. Watson's account is a recounting of the same deplorable situation in which we have found ourselves in every national emergency. Today we must rebuild the forces we let disintegrate in the past few years. To have the "enduring system of National Defense" envisioned by Secretary of Defense Marshall we must maintain adequate Regular Establishments on land, sea, and air, backed by a pool of trained men supplied by an orderly system of Universal Military Training, and an industry equipped and skilled in the manufacture of the sinews of war. Members of Congress and the people of the United States should read Mr. Watson's book to learn what it means not to have these fundamental policies in active operation. In the past we have been able to buy the time to make up our shortcomings. In the future we may not have that opportunity.

Justice for Warrant Officers Now. THE JOURNAL was gratified last week to print the announcement that the Department of Defense is preparing legislation setting up a definite system of promotion for Warrant Officers. The proposals are designed to assure every qualified warrant officer the top of that category prior to normal retirement. This most certainly should be done—in fact it should have been done a long time ago. However, there is no reason why the present lid on warrant promotions should not be raised and a reasonable number of advancements permitted now instead of waiting for legislation to be enacted, which might take many months. The present bill leaves the distribution of warrant officers up to the Secretaries, but that authority has been used only to stop the flow to upper grades for "budgetary" reasons. The Secretaries could use their authority to increase the upper grades now.

The proposed legislation is virtually assured of passage after it has been thoroughly examined by the committees and all groups had an opportunity to express their views. While it is true that the Personnel Policy Board has been working on the warrant officer problem a very long time, it must be remembered that many difficulties are involved in getting the three Services together on a single plan, and it may well be that objections will arise to the present one. That some definite action is at last in sight is due in no small measure to the persistent efforts of the Chief Warrant and Warrant Officers Association U. S. Coast Guard who not only devoted considerable time and effort to the matter but also employed capable counsel to assist them. Credit likewise should go to Representative Pat Sutton (D-Tenn.), who fought unsuccessfully for an equitable distribution at the time the Pay Bill was passed and has kept assiduously after it ever since.

Review of Navy War Promotions Killed. Five members of the House of Representatives this week combined to kill the bill (S. 780) designed to review the records of naval officers who failed of promotion by the "short-cut" panels during World War II. The bill was passed by the Senate 6 July 1949 after extensive hearings which clearly revealed that in the turmoil and haste of war qualified officers had been passed over for promotion through errors of omitted reports, etc. The bill would have permitted a review of these cases and correction where errors had occurred. The House subsequently held long and detailed hearings and reported the bill favorably on 29 Aug. 1950. The bill originally was introduced 3 Feb. 1949 to promote Comdr. Edward W. Rawlins, jr., USN, and was broadened by the Senate Committee to review all similar records. Commander Rawlins, who testified extensively in both the Senate and House hearings has since been transferred to the Far East. The bill has been consistently opposed by the Navy Department ever since its introduction. All that was needed to assure enactment and long deferred justice to the officers concerned was passage by the House. The bill was reached Monday on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Under this procedure no discussion of the merits of the measure is permitted. If there is no objection the bill is passed. An objection "without prejudice" passes over consideration but the bill remains on the Consent Calendar until it is reached again. However, five objections, such as occurred in this case, strikes the measure from the Consent Calendar. The five objectors, none of whom is a member of the Armed Services Committee which considered the measure, were: Representatives Hare (D-S. C.), Wadsworth (R-N. Y.), Byrnes (R-Wisc.), Cunningham (R-Iowa), and Ford (R-Mich.). Chairman Vinson (D-Ga.), who might have secured enactment by getting a rule for House consideration of the bill on its merits, told THE JOURNAL that he will take no such action to save the measure. "It is a dead duck," he said. Thus, parliamentary procedure permits six men to kill a measure already approved by the Senate and by the 34-member House Armed Services Committee.

Phooy on the "New Look"

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

As I sit vainly puzzling how to wear the nap off my outmoded shade 51 trousers and fray the cuffs of my doomed green combat jacket before throw-away day, 1 July, and still look presentable on 30 June, I feel not entirely qualified to speak without passion about uniform changes. Perhaps fifteen years of prematurely tossing away breeches, English boots, cotton blouses, tropical worsted jackets, Sam Browne belts, overseas caps and lately greens and Horstmann overcoats have crystallized in me a reactionary attitude toward the New Look. Nevertheless, I should like to let it be known that I don't favor any newer, more gorgeous creations to raise my morale.

Even in normal times, a decision for snappier parade and party uniforms, no more serviceable than the old, would impose a lamentable hardship on regular officers, on those enlisted men who have bought extra uniforms, and on hundreds of thousands of Reserve and National Guard officers who would have to buy new uniforms for part time use.

In time of emergency such as this, and with wool desperately short, such frills add nothing to the operating efficiency of the army and any serious preoccupation with them would be a questionable use of manpower, and possible indication of a need for filling some of our depleted ranks from the Pentagon.

The idea of substituting two uniforms for one in time of war is logistically unsound. As for changing the present one to something dressier, a uniform should not be so dressy as to be useless in the combat zone. Our O.D. jackets may not have pleased the vanity of the USO soldier at home in the last war, but they seemed dressy in Rome to the boys just out of Anzio and Cassino. Since the army cannot afford to send men to the combat zone with special dress uniform for social affairs, these men will be just as happy to know that the wolves who are dating their girls back home are not camouflaged in Z. O. I. Zouave suits.

There are political and purely military reasons why a basic uniform change, such as to gray, should be regarded askance. There are advantages to having a uniform easily known and recognized everywhere. Even at home, it is advantageous to have the citizens be able to distinguish military personnel from bus drivers and messenger boys. Abroad, the O.D. uniform of the men who liberated Africa and Europe is an unforgettable symbol of freedom and power.

If the confidence of the public and the army in the quality of army leadership is not to be adversely affected by continued coy leaks of possible momentous new zoot suits, it seems imperative that there be a definite official and final announcement that all of the present uniform styles will remain unchanged and that any obsolescent uniforms, all which can save critical materials and are functionally adequate, be continued in use until worn out.

Oil Strike

Friend or Foe

It was the new recruit's first turn of sentry duty. So his voice was rather shaky as he exclaimed:

"Halt! Who is there?"

Out of the darkness came the startling reply:

"Foe!"

"Have a heart, chum," the sentry protested. "I haven't had time to learn the answer to that one yet!"

The center of pressure in the Battle of Britain which is giving Churchill the greatest concern at the moment is not due to the air offensive against London and the Midlands but to the Nazi sea attacks against British shipping two to four hundred miles west of Ireland.

25 Years Ago

The question of the adoption of the lapel collar for Army coats and overcoats for officers and enlisted men of the Regular Establishment was settled on Dec. 5, when the Secretary of War granted his approval to the new type of uniform. Ever since the Secretary of War definitely approved the lapel collar uniform for officers of the Air Service on July 27, 1925, the War Department has had under consideration the adoption of this style of collar for the other branches of the Service, and the National Guard and the Reserves.

50 Years Ago

The War Department will, in the course of a few weeks, formulate a method and system for a comprehensive curriculum to be carried out in all the colleges of the country where a military officer has been detailed for instructor and tactical officer. The intention is to bring these institutions into touch with the existing state of affairs at West Point, in order that a definite method may be pursued in the important matter of military instruction as a preparation for the enlargement of the militia system already in operation in several of the States.

85 Years Ago

The Indian difficulties do not appear to have entirely ceased with the conclusion of treaties of peace. A party of 200 Cheyenne and Apache Indians attacked a coach on Butterfield's Express route on November 19th, near Downes' Spring, and killed six of the passengers. After burning the express coach the Indians went to Downes' Spring and Bluff stations and burned all the buildings, destroyed all the stored goods and a considerable amount of other property. They carried off the live stock from five mail stations.

SERVICE NEWS AND GOSSIP

Foreign Affairs—The series of conferences on the Korean crisis between President Truman and British Prime Minister Clement Attlee in Washington led the international developments this week. Mr. Attlee was in a position to present not only the English viewpoint, but also that of France and possibly other Western European countries.

Just prior to leaving last Sunday on his hurried trip to Washington to confer with the President Mr. Attlee met French Premier Rene Pleven in London and discussed earnestly the military defeat in Korea. After the meeting it was announced that Messrs. Attlee and Pleven were in general agreement on all major issues that had arisen out of the stunning reverses suffered by the United Nations forces. Apparently Mr. Attlee is also in a position to speak for other European democracies.

Mr. Attlee's visit to the United States is for the purpose not only of seeking an early solution to the Korean crisis, if possible, but also of accelerating progress in the united effort of North Atlantic Pact countries for the protection of Western Europe against Communist aggression.

Since the shocking defeat of the Allied forces in Korea by the hordes of Chinese Communists, Western European countries, in common with the rest of the world, have been convinced that an early and favorable military decision in Korea is out of the question. Hence, they are seeking eagerly to arrive at a diplomatic solution that will avoid a general war. They greatly fear that the United States military and economic strength may be so committed in a war in China as to leave no reserve to help Europe to repel possible Russian armed aggression.

On arriving Mr. Attlee said that Britain and the United States for many years had been agreed on broad objectives of international policy, including maintenance of peace, resistance to aggression, improvement of living standards in all countries, and upholding the democratic way of life. He said the attempt of the Cominform to drive a wedge between the two countries was wasted effort. Mr. Attlee said his aim in the talks with the President would be "to align our policies in the new and troubled situation in the world, and to find the means of upholding what we know to be right."

Accompanying Mr. Attlee to this country were Field Marshal Sir William Slim, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, and a group of military and diplomatic aides. Several of these participated with the prime minister in the series of conversations with the President. Present also were Secretary of State Dean Acheson, General of the Army Omar N. Bradley, Chairman of the United States Joint Chiefs of Staff, and other Presidential advisers. Some of the Congressional leaders of both parties were kept informed of the progress of the talks and attended some of the meetings. The conferences began on Mr. Attlee's arrival last Monday and continued throughout the week.

In an address to the National Press Club in Washington, Mr. Attlee made it clear that there would be no appeasement of the Chinese Reds. He said that in fair or foul weather so long as the American flag flew in Korea the British ensign would be beside it. In turn, Mr. Truman is said to have assured the British prime minister that our involvement in Korea would not lessen our efforts in behalf of European security.

While the Korean conflict received much attention in the current diplomatic talks in Washington there was a great deal of discussion of international action to strengthen the military potential of the western democracies. The need for greater production, particularly of essential raw materials, was emphasized.

Premier Pandit Nehru of India this week called for a cease-fire throughout Korea, followed by a genuine effort to establish peace in the Far East. Only thus, he said, could a global war be avoided. He denounced the suggested use of the atom bomb as a surrender to evil. Mr. Harold Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania, a national Republican leader, who is now in Tokyo, also called for a cease-fire agreement pending a diplomatic settlement. Mr. Stassen's statement was made following a long conference with General Douglas MacArthur, but Mr. Stassen said he spoke only for himself.

In the meantime at the request of the United States, Great Britain, France, Norway, Cuba and Ecuador the General Assembly of the United Nations began debating the resolution against the Red Chinese intervention in Korea. The resolution previously had received a favorable vote of 9 to 1 in the Security Council, but the one negative vote, cast by Russia, constituted a veto. The question now is before the veto-free General Assembly. The outcome of the Truman-Attlee conferences is regarded as being of more far-reaching effect than passage of the resolution by the Assembly.

Behind the scenes at the United Nations, diplomats, particularly those of some of the smaller countries, are attempting to find an avenue to approach the Red Chinese delegation in the rather slender hope of ending the Communist intransigence. Before agreeing to any cessation of hostilities the Reds may be expected to insist on withdrawal of all foreign troops from Korea, removal of the American Seventh Fleet from Formosan waters, membership of Red China in the United Nations, and participation in the determination of the future of Korea. The United States is likely to reject such terms.

Sir Benegal Rau, representative of India at the United Nations, has had several informal conferences with the Red Chinese delegation, but has not expressed any optimism over the outlook. Secretary-General Trygve Lie of the United Nations invited the Chinese representatives and the delegates of several countries which had recognized Red China to a dinner at which the current crisis was earnestly discussed with unannounced results. Thirteen Asiatic and Middle Eastern nations appealed to the Chinese Reds to halt their intervention in Korea at the 38th parallel, the old boundary between North and South Korea, a point already approached by the Red vanguard.

One result of the Korean crisis was the acceleration of international action for the defense of Western Europe. Differences were submerged by the common danger and a general agreement on the early establishment of a joint security force of Atlantic Pact nations is reported to have been reached. The appointment of General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower as supreme commander of this international force was believed to be imminent.

Voters of West Berlin this week demonstrated their sturdy opposition to Communism by turning out in unprecedented numbers to cast their ballots at a municipal election boycotted by the Reds. More than 90 per cent of the qualified electors voted, as compared with a previous high of 86 per cent, despite the fact that the Communists carried on an aggressive campaign, urging all citizens to refrain from voting as a rebuke to the western powers.

Results of this election reversed the Socialist trend registered in previous recent elections in West Germany. The Socialist vote in Berlin dropped from 64 to 44 per cent, while that of the conservative Christian Democrats increased from 19 to 24 per cent, and that of the Free Democrats, also conservative, from 16 to 23 per cent. Several minor parties received negligible votes. The municipal government will be controlled by a coalition of the three leading parties, as at present.

General MacArthur's Communications—Cables to and from General of the Army Douglas MacArthur in recent days have been an important source of news and observations regarding the all-out Chinese intervention in the Korean fighting. Normally, such information is dispatched largely by correspondents with the combat forces in Korea or at headquarters of the Supreme Commander in Tokyo. However, stories concerning General MacArthur's reactions have broken during the past week or so from such points as Washington, New York and Frankfurt, Germany.

On 1 Dec., President Hugh Baillie of the United Press released a copyrighted story which gave the text of a cable sent him by General MacArthur in response to questions put him by the newspaper official. In this dispatch, General MacArthur declared that U.N. forces are fighting against "military odds without precedent in history." He said there was no precedent in history for a situation "permitting offensive action without defensive retaliation." General MacArthur declared that "any breach of freedom in the East carries with it a sinister threat to freedom in the West."

Observers saw two main implications in this message, first the dramatic presentation of the situation confronting U.N. forces unable to strike the Chinese Communists at their rallying points across the Yalu River boundary, and second, an emphatic reminder to Europeans that the situation in Korea is related directly to Western European defense.

Also on 1 Dec., there was released in Washington—again copyrighted—answers by General MacArthur to questions cabled him by editors of the magazine, U.S. News and World Report. Asked if he would describe the present situation as "critical and serious, but not hopeless," General MacArthur replied: "Yes, definitely, unless one completely discounts the combined resources of the free nations engaged in the Korean conflict." Again, as in the dispatch to Mr. Baillie, General MacArthur told the magazine editors that the limitations upon the pursuit of the Chinese and restrictions on attacking their bases created "an enormous handicap without precedent in military history."

An inquiry from Mr. Arthur Krock, Washington correspondent of the New York Times, brought from General MacArthur a cablegram, published on 1 Dec., which declared that the General had received "no suggestion from any authoritative source that in the executions of its mission the Command should stop at the 38th Parallel or Pyongyang or at any other line short of the international boundary." The New York Times had published a story by Mr. James Reston which stated that the British had circulated a paper proposing that U.N. troops leave a buffer zone between the U.N. and Red Chinese Armies. Mr. Reston's dispatch said that "in each case, General MacArthur took the view that these suggestions were jeopardizing the victories he had won." When Mr. Krock cabled General MacArthur on this matter, the response was that "there is no validity whatsoever to the anonymous gossip to which you refer. Every strategic and tactical movement made by the U.N. Command had been in complete accordance with U.N. resolutions and in compliance with the directives under which I operate, every major step having been previously reported and fully approved."

After these cabled dispatches were breaking into news columns around the world, from Tokyo on 2 Dec., there was released the answers to 19 questions which officials said had been submitted to General MacArthur by correspondents. Asked to classify the over-all situation existing in Korea, General MacArthur said "a state of undeclared war between the Chinese Communists and the U.N. forces now exists. Chinese forces are supported by remnants of the defeated North Korean Army." To the question whether he regarded the "present campaign as a continuation of the North Korean aggression or representing an entirely new phase of aggression," General MacArthur's response was that "this in my opinion is a new war with a new opponent and a new army. The North Korean forces were destroyed and the mission of the U.N. command practically fulfilled when this fresh aggression was launched."

Task Force Three—Brig. Gen. Arthur Richard Walk, USA, has been given command of the Army Ground Troops at the Eniwetok Proving Ground in the Marshall Islands, Central Pacific, to participate in Joint Task Force Three, commanded by Lt. Gen. Elwood R. Quesada, USAF, and created in November 1949 to test atomic weapons for the Atomic Energy Commission.

General Walk formerly was Professor of Military Science and Tactics for Pennsylvania State College, College Station, Pa.

British Ace Honored—Wing Commander James Johnson, credited with shooting down 40 enemy planes during World War II to become Great Britain's leading fighter ace, recently was awarded the Air Medal by Brig. Gen. Edward J. Timberlake, USAF, Vice Commander, Fifth Air Force, for flights over Korea.

Duty for Korean Veterans—The Army wants to employ the services of Korean veterans, returned to the United States as a result of combat wounds, to best advantage. Just published is Special Regulations No. 615-220-40, which prescribes action to be taken in order to place enlisted men in grade E-4 or higher at schools or with civilian component units.

Inter-American Defense Board—Brig. Gen. Edwin L. Sibert, Commanding General of the U. S. Army Forces Antilles and Military District of Puerto Rico since 22 Nov. 1948 has received orders transferring him to Washington, D. C., where he will become the Director of the Staff of the Inter-American Defense Board on 10 Dec. General Sibert left Puerto Rico by air on 7 Dec.

General Sibert's new assignment will place him in charge of an international military agency, subordinate to the Government of the American States, for consultation and preparation of plans in matters of collective defense. The present Director of the Board is Maj. Gen. Robert Walsh, USAF.

"United Nations" Tank—The crew of a Marine Corps tank with the First Marine Division in Korea has named its vehicle "United Nations" and there is a good reason. M/Sgt. William O. Koontz, a Moslem, commands the Pershing tank. Tank gunner is Cpl. James R. Rader, a Hebrew, while the loader, Cpl. Andrew Navarro is a Catholic. The other crew members are Cpl. Donald R. Husted, a Methodist, and Sgt. Thomas W. Wiley, a Presbyterian.

'51 Military Budget: An Analysis—On 1 Dec. 1949, confronted with the limitations of a $13 billion military budget to be presented Congress in January, the Department of Defense announced that personnel cutbacks would total 17,000 officers. One year later, President Truman, faced with a grave international crisis, transmitted to Congress a second supplemental request of $16.8 billion to raise total Armed Forces appropriation requests to $41.8 billion—more than three times the original allocation for defense. Following is a brief chronological and analytical report on the development of the military budget.

Reducing by more than a billion dollars the amount he had asked for the previous year, the President on 9 Jan. 1949 sent to Congress a $13 billion military budget. Of this total, $4 billion was for the Army, $3.9 billion for the Navy, and $4.4 billion for the Air Force—virtually a three-way split. This budget envisaged a total strength of 1,507,000 divided as follows: Army, 630,000; Navy and Marine Corps, 461,000; and Air Force, 416,000. The Army was to have 10 divisions. The Navy funds were enough to maintain 652 vessels, including 238 combat ships. The Air Force was to continue at its 48-group strength.

In the field of procurement, the initial 1951 budget request sought $2.08 billion for aircraft, $298 million for ship construction and $678 million for other major procurement.

Early in February, the annual report of Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson declared that the nation's defenses "have never been in a more favorable condition in time of peace," but he added the warning that "failure to keep our Armed Forces at a strength commensurate with our requirements . . . would jeopardize our very existence as a free and independent nation."

One month later, in March, the House Appropriations Committee recommended that the 1951 military budget be cut $203 million below the $13 billion asked by the President. The Committee, although cutting the budget, protested the impounding of previously voted funds of $157 million in cash and $577 million in contract authority for an Air Force buildup to 58 groups and said, "world conditions do not indicate that such a downward trend is justified."

As the international picture continued to look darker, Congressmen, concerned that Armed Forces strength was not "commensurate with requirements," and moved by testimony of General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower which coincided with the shooting down of a Navy patrol plane in the Baltic, gave quick approval in late April to supplemental appropriations of $350 million. This would add $200 million for Air Force plane procurement, provide an additional $100 million for Naval aircraft and increase spending for anti-submarine warfare by $50 million. Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) had said earlier than $583 million additional was necessary, of which the Air Force would have received $200 million and the Navy, $383 million for planes. No new funds were asked by Secretary Johnson for Alaskan defenses, which General Eisenhower had said needed bolstering.

As the military appropriations bill was being debated in the House during the first week in May, there was an almost unanimous reversal of traditional Congressional action on military budgets. Whereas in almost every peacetime year and significantly in action on the previous year's budget, Congress had cut requests, this year the criticism was directed almost exclusively to the inadequacy of funds being sought. Representative Harry R. Sheppard (D-Calif.), who handled the appropriations bill on the floor of the House, asked pointedly: "Are we doing as much as we ought to do in providing our military forces with adequate and advanced materiel of all types and characters in order that we may preserve the integrity of our form of government and our way of living?"

In approving the military budget, the House voted on 9 May to include the $385 million to bring total new obligational authority to $13.8 billion. The Army was given $24 million for its anti-tank program and $11 million in supplemental funds was voted for maintenance of hospitals. The closing of military hospitals in the economy drive had been attacked bitterly by the House Armed Services Committee.

After House passage in May of the defense budget, the Senate Appropriations Committee, acting the week before the North Korean aggression was launched, voted to increase by $383 million the amount approved by the House.

Then, on 27 June the President ordered American forces to the Korean government troop cover and support and declared: "The attack upon Korea makes it plain beyond all doubt that communism has passed beyond the use of subversion to conquer independent nations and now will use armed invasion and war."

By 1 July, the date in which the fiscal year begins and for which fiscal year a $13 billion military budget had been prepared, it was obvious that additional billions were needed immediately. An instantaneous about-face on stringent defense economies was urgent. If "fat" had been cut from the Armed Forces, there was now need for more "bone and muscle." The military strength on 30 June of 1,458,500 was not sufficient for the task at hand. Present strength, the President reported, is over 2,250,000.

Therefore, President Truman on 24 July sent to Congress a supplemental budget for $10.4 billion, "first to meet the immediate situation in Korea and second to provide for an early but orderly build-up of our military forces to a state of readiness designed to deter further aggression." The supplemental request provided $3.63 billion for the Army, $2.649 billion for the Navy and $4.535 billion for the Air Force. Where the initial $13 billion budget request had been divided almost equally among the three Services, the supplemental funds emphasized relatively more acute Army and Air Force needs as compared to those of the Navy. About 59 per cent or $6.2 billion of the $10.4 billion was for major procurement.

Chairman Carl Vinson of the House Armed Services Committee, warning that "all the world today is a tinder box," declared in an address before the House on 25 July that the $10 billion must be considered as a minimum and not a maximum request. "It is high time that the American people be done with the emphasis on the so-called calculated risks we have heard so much about in the past two years." Characteristically, Chairman Vinson asserted: "Our great need right now is to get the ox out of the ditch—not spend a lot of time trying to find out who pushed him into the ditch. . . . Our defenses urgently need strengthening. It is time to get action."

Another month passed by and Chairman Vinson's "minimum, not maximum" declaration was proved correct as the President called upon Congress to appropriate an additional $1.1 billion, mostly for Naval aviation.

By this time, military appropriations had almost doubled since the beginning of the year, for now Congress had received requests and had indicated its approval for expenditure of $24.9 billion. (It is recalled that there had been sharp criticism when the late Secretary of Defense James Forrestal reported that preliminary planning for the fiscal year 1950 budget envisaged the need for $23 billions.)

The $24 billion was broken down as follows: Army, $7.3 billion; Navy and Marine Corps, $7.8 billion; and Air Force, $9.3 billion. In the course of the year, the Air Force and Navy had gained relatively to the Army.

Now, even as work is going ahead on the fiscal year 1952 budget which will reach Congress next month, the President has asked a new supplemental military appropriation of $16.8 billion, made necessary by the intervention in the Korean fighting of the Chinese Communist land-mass army.

Therefore, in view of the need for greatly strengthened ground forces, it is not surprising that the $16.8 billion supplemental request provides relatively more for the Army than for the other Services. The Army will receive $9.2 billion more to bring its total appropriation to $16.5 billion; the Navy and Marine Corps are granted $2.9 billion more for a total of $10.8 billion; and the Air Force will receive $4.6 billion more for a total of $13.9 billion.

Hindsight shows then that the almost equal division of the initial budget made in December 1949 was made obsolete by the situation in Korea and the rest of the world as it existed on 1 December 1950. By that date, the Army's needs were in the approximate ratio of 16.5:10.8 to the Navy and 16.5:13.9 to the Air Force.

Army Surgeon General's Office—Capt. Francis J. Olson, MSC, has been assigned to the Technical Information Office, SGO. Since his recall to active duty last August and prior to his present assignment, Captain Olson was stationed at Camp Gordon, Ga.

Captain Olson served during World War II with the 86th and 108th General Hospitals overseas, and took part in the campaign of Northern France. After his separation, he resumed his long experience in newspaper work with the Chicago Journal of Commerce and as head of his own public relations office in Chicago.

U. S. COAST GUARD

PRESIDENT Truman has asked Congress to appropriate an additional $26,500,000 for the Coast Guard, of which $18,600,000 is for operating expenses and $7,900,000 for acquisition, construction and improvements.

That the President would ask supplemental funds for the Coast Guard during the current fiscal year was freely predicted after the Service had been given increased responsibilities, notably for port security, during recent months.

It was obvious that the critical function of safeguarding the nation's ports against sabotage or attack would require a marked expansion of the Coast Guard, necessitating additional money.

The President noted in his supplemental budget request that $3,900,000 is necessary to cover the increased cost of dependency benefit payments and $14,700,000 will be used to cover costs attributable to the enlarged Coast Guard defense role.

The Chief Executive told Congress that $7,900,000 is needed to purchase equipment to permit the Coast Guard to fulfill its obligations in the overall defense picture.

Congress was also asked to approve the following proviso in the budget request: "Appropriations made under this head for the fiscal year 1951 shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred during prior fiscal years for retired pay." It is explained that "this provision will enable the Coast Guard to pay prior year claims resulting from recomputation of retired pay of military personnel under the terms of the Career Compensation Act, 1949. The recomputation of the retired pay of certain enlisted men also is necessary as a result of the Act of August 4, 1949 (Public Law 207), involving a 10 per cent increase in retirement pay of men cited for extraordinary heroism in line of duty or who have attained certain good conduct marks while on active duty."

The supplemental Coast Guard budget of $26,500,000 compares with the President's original request of $186,504,000 for the Coast Guard during fiscal year 1951. This amount was asked in the budget sent to Congress in January.

Capt. Gruenther Honored

Capt. Richard L. Gruenther was presented the Silver Star Medal for gallantry in action and the Purple Heart at a ceremony this week at Tokyo Army Hospital.

Maj. Gen. A. P. Fox, Deputy Chief of Staff, presented the Silver Star Medal and Maj. Gen. Edgar Erskine Hume, Chief Surgeon FEC and United Nations Command, presented Captain Gruenther the Purple Heart.

The young officer was cited for gallantry and outstanding leadership on 17 Nov. while commanding Company C, 17th Infantry Regiment, 7th Infantry Division. The accompanying citation read in part: "Captain Gruenther led his unit in an advance on the division objective, the town of Kapsan, North Korea. Against strong and persistent enemy resistance, Captain Gruenther distinguished himself by skillfully directing his attack and personally moving among his men to supervise their activities. His outstanding leadership and his complete disregard for his own personal safety gave great encouragement to his troops and resulted in the successful advance of his unit to the objective. Although seriously wounded during the course of this action, he continued to direct the attack. His personal action materially aided the accomplishment of the 7th Infantry Division's mission and reflected great credit upon himself and the military service."

Also present at the ceremony, which was held in the office of Col. K. A. Brewer, were Captain Gruenther's wife, Susan; Maj. Gen. W. A. Beiderlinden, Assistant Chief of Staff, G-1; Mrs. E. M. Almond; Col. and Mrs. C. H. Owens, and Col. L. P. Miller.

Captain Gruenther, who is the son of Lt. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, G-3, Department of the Army, was graduated from West Point in 1946.

Marine Promotions

The Marine Corps this week announced the largest mass promotion of enlisted personnel since end of the war.

The order affects 2,600 Marine staff non-commissioned officers, including recently recalled Reservists, and is retroactive to 2 Dec. The breakdown of promotions is: master sergeants—917; technical sergeants—798; and staff sergeants—885. In addition, several thousand promotions to the rank of sergeant and corporal are also being readied.

Responsible for Funds

The Court of Claims ruled this week that a former agent finance officer in the Army was responsible for funds which he accepted and which were subsequently lost, and that he was "not entitled to recover" the money involved.

The former officer, Lt. Col. Albert J. Binsfeld, accepted delivery of four pay envelopes containing $741.03 in cash from another agent officer and gave a receipt for the amount. He agreed to hand the envelopes to a third officer who was to pay the four employees. Later, he was called away from his office, and while he was gone the envelopes disappeared, and he found he was required to replace the money from his own funds.

The Court ruled that in accepting delivery of the money and responsibility therefor, "he was cognizant of the care and caution which should have been exercised in their safeguard and protection," and that "as a matter of law" he "is not entitled to recover."

Ships of the Fleet

The hospital ship, USS Repose, under command of Capt. C. H. Perdue, USN, capable of handling nearly 800 casualties, late last month was at the port of Chinnampo in Korea, after becoming the biggest ship ever to navigate the tortuous port channel.

On 27 Nov., the USS Warrick, amphibious attack cargo ship, arrived at Pearl Harbor from the forward areas with two damaged combat planes lashed to the forward deck.

To replace the minesweepers USS Pelican, USS Swallow and USS Gull, reassigned to forward combat areas, the USS Bobolink, USS Bunting and USS Hornbill recently arrived in Hawaii, accompanied by the Fleet Tug USS Molala, to operate as Mine Division Fifty-one.

The USS White Marsh, veteran of many World War II campaigns in the Pacific, was recommissioned yesterday, 8 Dec. The landing ship dock will be under command of Comdr. Cooper B. Bright, USN, a brother of Capt. Joy Bright Hancock, USN, senior WAVE officer.

Stepchild Dependency

The Comptroller General has ruled (B-96686) that "a stepchild of a member of the uniformed services may be regarded, after the death of the child's blood parent as a dependent within the meaning of the term as defined in section 102(g) of the Career Compensation Act of 1949, so as to authorize the payment of increased allowances to the member on account of such a dependent stepchild."

Award for G-E President

Charles E. Wilson, of New York City, president of General Electric Company, received the Secretary of the Navy's Distinguished Public Service Award from Secretary of the Navy Francis P. Matthews on 5 Dec.

The award, highest the Navy can give to a civilian, was presented in recognition of Mr. Wilson's work in World War II as chairman of the Production Executive Committee.

Accompanying the award was the following citation:

"The Secretary of the Navy's Distinguished Public Service Award is hereby presented to Mr. Charles E. Wilson for his great contribution to the war effort in World War II as Chairman of the Production Executive Committee.

"Under his enlightened leadership, tireless and efficient performance of duty and extraordinary understanding of engineering, production, manufacturing and marketing the production facilities of this country were raised to their highest degree of efficiency.

"This unprecedented rise in American productive power was due in great measure to the many associations grouped under and coordinated by the Production Executive Committee of which Mr. Wilson was the guiding spirit. He has focused world-wide attention on American production as an effective instrument of national defense and has contributed substantially toward an understanding between government and industry, of the requirements and responsibilities of each.

"In full appreciation of the contributions this award is presented this fifth day of December 1950."

Military Procurement Reg.

Section XIV of the Armed Services Procurement Regulation, establishing uniform policies for inspection and acceptance of supplies and services contracted for by the military departments, has been issued by the Department of Defense.

The new part of the regulation, entitled, "Section XIV, Inspection and Acceptance," will apply to contracts executed on and after 1 Jan. 1951. Section XIV is the thirteenth section of the Armed Services Procurement Regulation to be issued under a Department of Defense program, coordinated by the Munitions Board, to bring about uniformity in all procurement regulations of the armed services. Three remaining sections of the regulations are in preparation.

A major stipulation of the new section is that all inspection of supplies by the military departments are to be in accordance with uniform standards promulgated by the Department of Defense. These include standards as to sampling procedure, statistical quality, control needs, gage design, use and care, policies as to exchange of services, methods of interpreting specifications, uniform test terminology, and standardized forms. The section also provides that a minimum of inspection will be required, consistent with the technical or monetary value of the supplies.

In a section on acceptance of supplies, the regulation provides that, as a rule, if these do not pass inspection they will be returned to the contractor. However, under special circumstances, such as urgency of need, or economy, supplies which fail to meet inspection may be accepted with adjustments as to price or other terms of the contract.

The full text of the regulation may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at five cents a copy. All orders should go directly to that agency.

Shipping Authority

Vice Adm. Edward L. Cochran, Maritime Administrator, said this week he hopes to be able to announce this month development of a working plan for creation of a National Shipping Authority, should President Truman proclaim a state of emergency or in case of war.

Admiral Cochran made his statement following a meeting of shipping men in Washington. The conference was held to plan for operation of the merchant fleet in a manner similar to that under the World War II War Shipping Administration.

The committee is headed by H. H. Robson, vice-president of United Fruit Company. Other members are Archibald E. King, vice-president of Isthmian Steamship Company; Howell Smith, of Smith and Johnson; Ralph Keating, president of Refrigerator Steamship Company, and Fred A. Pratt, of Socony-Vacuum Oil Company.

Flight Trainers

Two new electronic flight trainers have been added to the Navy's flight training program.

Designed and built by Link Aviation, Inc., Binghamton, N. Y., for the Special Devices Center of the Office of Naval Research, the trainers duplicate the F3D and SNJ-5 aircraft. The F3D is a new twin jet night fighter while the SNJ-5 is the wheel horse of the Navy's basic air training program.

Both of the ground-bound Links are electronic throughout; both are "operational" in that they contain duplicate controls and instruments of the aircraft which function exactly as they do in the air.

Link has begun deliveries on 27 of the SNJ's and will shortly ship the first of four F3D's.

While the SNJ Link bears considerable physical resemblance to its airborne counterpart, the F3D Link is self-contained within a huge trailer. Completely air conditioned, the F3D may be used as a mobile training installation or it may be removed from the trailer in which it is housed for fixed land or carrier base operations. The basic components of the trainer-pilot's cockpit, instructor's console and electronic control cabinets, are mounted on a single plane within the trailer and are sectionalized for easy removal and re-installation.

Link is also equipping an auxiliary trailer with simulated radar signal generating equipment which will be used with one of the F3D's.

Utilization of the F3D in the Navy's jet fighter training program will cover every phase of flight instruction and practice: cockpit familiarization, ground and air engine operation, power settings and attitudes for varying conditions of flight under day and night instrument conditions, navigation by radio, and crew coordination between pilot and radar operator. The trainer contains all facilities for transition training of new jet pilots as well as improving the proficiency of experienced ones.

Flight instruction and practice in the SNJ are equally complete. Training effectiveness of the SNJ is increased by the instructor's cockpit with its dual controls. For the first time in a flight trainer, the instructor actually flies with the student pilot and is able to "take over" whenever the occasion demands.

AF Supply Seminar

Importance of logistical support to the Air Force in its world-wide operations was stressed this week at the opening of a three-day logistics seminar at Headquarters, Air Materiel Command, Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio.

Welcoming to the seminar approximately 50 senior Air Force officers, Brig. Gen. James F. Early, chief of the Supply Division, AMC, emphasized that the supply motto is "effective service"—get the right items, to the right place, at the right time—with the utmost economy.

The officers are from the Logistics Staff Officer Course, Craig AFB, Ala. The seminar is part of the initial 22-week Logistics Staff Officer Course, conducted by the USAF Special Staff School of Air University. As graduates of this first class, General Early stressed that the students will be charged with responsibilities which are of most serious consequence in the support of the Air Force and national defense.

Pointing out some of the problems which they will have to meet, such as shortages, special emergencies, and critical needs, the General called upon the students to approach these from a down-to-earth factual examination of basic fundamentals. The students also were advised that the great portion of their future task will be that of teaching and indoctrinating other personnel in the Air Force concerning the proper management of their logistics functions.

Col. Robert I. Fletcher, chief of the Clothing and Equipment Section, outlined the background and the method of distributing uniforms to airmen. He explained Air Force uniform financial, procurement, pricing, and distribution procedures, and the methods used to calculate the Air Force's uniform requirements.

Lt. Col. Ben H. Roberts, deputy for Stock Control, outlined the organizational structure of the Supply Division and of practices and controls in effect to insure effective management.

Maj. Ronald A. Paige, the Deputy for Budget and Requirements, explained the logistical relationship between the Army Service Forces and the Air Force. He reviewed the history of this relationship which began in July, 1947, with the passage of the National Security Act, and explored the anticipated Army Quartermaster Corps and Air Force future relationship.

In addition to Supply Division lectures the students also received instruction in AMC participation in the Mutual Defense Assistance Pact. This was given by Capt. Harry B. Morris, of the Mutual Defense Assistance Division, AMC. The captain reviewed mutual defense aid from the inception of Lend-Lease through the North Atlantic Treaty. He concluded by describing the present and future implementation of the Air Force portion of the Mutual Defense Assistance program by Headquarters, AMC.

Pay Raise Proposal

sage of the Career Compensation Act, the likelihood is that Representative Sutton's proposals for higher pay for junior officers will receive wide support in Congress.

Certainly, he will point out that since Congress recently voted to provide some financial relief for enlisted men with families through the passage of dependent allowances, efforts should be made to alleviate the serious financial problems of many junior officers, including hundreds with families who have been recalled to active duty in the current emergency.

Possibly, attention will be directed also to raising the pay of some warrant officers, particularly those in the W-1 status, who, if they have several dependents, would receive more pay as master sergeants at the present time than they do as warrant officers.

The disclosure that Representative Kilday was planning to introduce an omnibus bill of amendments to the Career Compensation Act was made in the 25 November issue of the ARMY NAVY AIR FORCE JOURNAL.

Military personnel who feel that the Career Compensation Act is inadequate in particular regards are encouraged to communicate their views to THE JOURNAL. These communications will be forwarded—anonously, where requested—to Representative Kilday.

Combat Pay

Meantime, it appeared this week that barring sudden action, the proposal to grant combat pay for ground force and other military personnel in Korea will not be acted upon by Congress until the new session begins in January.

There had been hope that the measure could have cleared the Department of Defense and Bureau of the Budget in time for action during the present session of Congress.

But this is extremely unlikely now and the probability is that the combat pay proposals may be included in Representative Kilday's forthcoming pay measure.

A Congressman who lost both legs in World War II, Representative Charles E. Potter (R-Mich), this week introduced a bill which would provide $5 a day hazardous duty pay for combat troops. He said he will introduce the bill again in January.

Warrant Officer Promotions

As work went forward this week on preparation of new warrant officer legislation, slated to reach Congress by 1 Feb., the Army and Air Force took action to make new warrant officer appointments in the W-1 category.

The legislation which will reach Congress early next year will be designed to increase the number of warrant officers in the W-2 and W-3 categories and will implement a Personnel Policy Board aim to provide every qualified warrant officer with an opportunity to reach the grade W-4, equivalent to major, prior to retirement.

The Air Force meantime was preparing plans for numerous warrant officer appointments. Speculation was that approximately 500 new warrant officers will be named, although details were not available this week.

At the present time, the Air Force has 1,305 warrant officers in W-1, 590 in W-2, 145 in W-3 and 61 in W-4.

Curiously, the Army, Navy and Marine Corps said such statistics were "classified."

warrant officer program, the Army has issued a revised AR 610-15 governing temporary appointments in grade W-1.

Major commanders have been given authority to make such appointments with the exception of certain career warrants, which will be made by The Adjutant General.

The Army said appointments will be made in approximately 51 fields within specific allocations by career warrant to be announced in the future. The first allocation is expected to total about 2,000.

The regulations apply to male and female personnel who on date of application are on active duty in the Army and who have completed at least three months' continuous service in the grade of master sergeant immediately prior to date of application, unless otherwise authorized at time of allocation.

Additionally, applicants must be citizens of the United States or aliens who have made legal declaration of their intent to become citizens.

Applicants will appear before boards of officers to demonstrate general fitness and technical qualifications for appointment, which will be based on results of examinations and approved recommendations of the board.

Travel Tax Bill

The House Ways and Means Committee this week reported favorably on H.R. 9840, a measure which would eliminate the transportation tax on certain leave and furlough travel for military personnel.

The legislation, as reported, stipulates that for special tariffs, where the round trip rate is no more than 1 1/2 cents per mile the 15 per cent tax will be waived.

Meantime, the railroads have announced that for the period 15 Dec. to 10 Jan., Armed Forces personnel on holiday leave will be given a cut-rate coach fare of two cents per mile.

ments. There should be no diplomas, he said, for the mere fact that an officer's name appeared on orders to the College was sufficient recognition of his ability. He maintained that, before being selected to attend the War College, an officer should have learned, "unless there be grave fault somewhere along the line," all that there was to know of the military skill and art, and that, thereafter, he should "learn by doing." From its establishment in 1901, this concept of General Bliss has set the pattern of the College, and this pattern has changed only slightly, and very gradually, through the years.

Twice the operation of the College has been suspended because the Nation went to war, and officers of the caliber of College students were needed more urgently as leaders and staff officers of the Army at War. On the 27th day of May, 1917, the class then in session was graduated before its scheduled date in June, and the College did not resume classes until after the end of the first World War. Again, in 1940, classes were suspended because of the War, and it was not until this year, 1950, that operation was resumed.

At the conclusion of the second World War, the need for joint schools of all three services was apparent; and, in the interests of unification and in recognition of this need, the Army relinquished the home of its War College at Fort Lesley J. McNair (formerly Washington Barracks) to the newly established National War College and Industrial College of the Armed Forces. It was recognized that the elimination of the Army War College, and its replacement by the two National Colleges, created a gap in the educational system of the Army, and this was confirmed by the findings of a post-war Board which studied the educational system of the Army. The Board recommended the early re-establishment of the Army War College in order to train selected officers for positions of high command and staff responsibility in the Army, and in order to correct the deficiency in officers so trained which had been created by the suspension for ten years of War College operation. The Chief of Staff, General J. Lawton Collins, energetically and unswervingly, pressed for the re-establishment of the College and, in the late Winter of 1949-50, it was directed that the first post-war class would enter during the Fall of 1950, to graduate in the Summer of 1951. The College was to be located temporarily at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., where school facilities were already in existence, until a permanent home could be found. This permanent home has been found at Carlisle Barracks, Pennsylvania, and the College will move there during the Summer of 1951.

In the operation of the College, the concept of General Bliss has been preserved. The mature and responsible demeanor of the members of the College obviates, to a very large extent, the need for supervision, and the distinction between students and faculty is almost exclusively one of whether the member is assigned permanently or temporarily to the College. At the present time, the student body numbers a hundred officers of lieutenant colonel and colonel rank, with a few Naval officers of comparable rank and experience included in that number. There are forty officers on the faculty, and both the Navy and Air Force are represented. The class is limited in size at the present time, because of the limited facilities at Fort Leavenworth—indeed, it was necessary to reduce the size of the class of the Command and General Staff College so that both schools could be accommodated. Gradually, as facilities at Carlisle Barracks are expanded, the size of the class will be increased to three hundred students a year.

The mission of the Army War College is to prepare officers for duty as commanders and as general staff officers within the headquarters of the army group and corresponding communications zone activities, the theater army, the theater, the continental army, and the Department of the Army—with emphasis on the Headquarters, Department of the Army.

In order to carry out this mission, the curriculum of the College has been divided into three major phases covering, respectively, the Army and national security, current Army problems, and war planning. The objectives of these three phases are as follows:

Phase I. The Army and National Security

1. To broaden the background of the student with respect to United States organization for national security and particularly with respect to the organization of the Department of the Army.

2. To develop a wider knowledge of the national policies, plans and objectives of the United States, with particular reference to the international aspects thereof.

3. To increase the student's ability to cope with problems involving national policy.

Phase II. Current Army Problems

1. To familiarize the student with current Army problems, programs, policies, and operations.

2. To develop the student's ability to analyze current Army problems and to increase the student's ability to propose and present solutions to these problems.

Phase III. War Planning

1. To increase the student's familiarity with the techniques of war planning.

2. To develop the student's ability to solve the military problems inherent to war planning, to include strategic mobilization and logistic aspects.

The basic method of instruction is the solution of problems in committees, followed by the presentation of committee solutions for class-wide discussion. Formal instruction designed to give general background to the student body is confined, to a large extent, to material presented by guest lecturers.

This method of instruction, combined with the curriculum, is arranged so that the student will develop a broad understanding of our national security problems, the Army peacetime problems, and the problems of war planning. Together, the curriculum and the method of instruction are designed to foster creative and objective thinking on the part of the student, while, at the same time, furnishing him with a broad but integrated picture of the problems of the Army as a whole.

The greatest part of the student's time is spent in the solution of problems. During an academic year, each student solves approximately fourteen problems of a committee type. In addition, he prepares one individual thesis and makes an oral presentation of it to all or a portion of the class. During the 1950-51 course approximately sixty problems will be presented to the class as a whole for solution by committees.

For the solution of problems, a committee normally consists of from six to eight students, guided by a faculty representative. Committees remain intact until a solution has been completed.

Distinguished guest lecturers provide basic information on subjects under study, and the analyses and conclusions presented by these lecturers afford important source material for the students in their studies, even though the students may not agree with them. A tradition of long standing restricts discussion of the lecturer's remarks to members of the College only, and, as a consequence, great freedom of thought and expression obtains in the lecture auditorium.

The faculty, headed by the faculty commandant, is composed of selected officers who are qualified in the various aspects of the military arts and sciences, either from broad study or from war experiences, or from both. The primary duties of the faculty are to determine the nature and scope of the problems, assist the students in the selection of reference material, and give them general guidance in their studies and deliberations. The faculty neither formulates nor suggests categorical solutions to any of the problems assigned.

Today the Army War College looks to the future—a future of continuing progress and accomplishment. Its activities in less than a half century have made it not only a great national institution in character, but the place of prominence held by its illustrious graduates will continue to give testimony to the contribution this great military educational institution makes toward the national security and to the peace of the world. Certainly, as one views the international situation today, the work of the College graduates seems cut out for them.
